Numéro d'ordre de la microfiche	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

Introduction

The Canadian Research Index - Microlog puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. Canadian Research Index in print is a monthly indexing and abstracting service. An electronic version on CD-ROM or via the Internet is also available. Microlog represents our fulltext document service. Most titles included in Canadian Research Index are available in paper as well as microfiche format. Together, these services are a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications.

The Canadian Research Index includes scientific and technical research papers in physical, natural and social sciences. It also includes policy papers, important statistical publications, and annual reports.

Documents issued in English or French are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in the language of the publication, while bilingual documents are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in both languages.

Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by the Microlog Service approximately two months after publication of the list.

SOURCES

- government publications from the federal, provincial and municipal levels
- depository publications of reference value
- non-depository publications issued by government organizations, laboratories and research centres
- non-profit organizations, educational institutions and research groups
- some monographs and serials issued by Statistics Canada

ORGANIZATION

Canadian Research Index comprises the following sections:

Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.

Corporate name index: Access by controlled format corporate names based on Canadian Authorities.

Personal name index: Access by personal name.

Subject index: Subject terms based on Library of Congress and Canadian Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.

Series titles: Lists by title and numbers all reports in a series; series are available as an on-going subscription or retrospective collection.

Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions.

ELECTRONIC ACCESS

The full Canadian Research Index file from 1982 to date is available in electronic formats on the SilverPlatter SPIRS platform. It is accessible on CD; it may be licensed for network use on a local server or on a SilverPlatter ERL server; and it is available for Internet subscription. Reports may be ordered through the National Technical Information Service in the U.S.A., or directly through IHS/Micromedia's Global Information Centre. All catalogued documents issued by Statistics Canada are now included in electronic versions of Canadian Research Index. For information, contact IHS/Micromedia's CD Centre at 1-800-387-2689.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document. Most documents cited in Canadian Research Index are available as part of the Microlog Microfiche Subscription Service, institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in the Index. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprints may be ordered through IHS/Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

Introduction

Microlog : Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. L'Index de recherche du Canada imprimé est un service mensuel d'indexation et de résumés. Une version électronique est également offerte sur CD-ROM ou dans Internet. Microlog représente notre service de documents en texte intégral. La plupart des titres figurant dans l'Index sont disponibles sous forme imprimée et sur microfiche. Ces services combinés constituent un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada.

L'Index contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels.

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

De vastes efforts sont déployés pour assurer la pertinence de l'index. Par exemple, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

SOURCES

- publications fédérales, provinciales et municipales
- publications déposées servant de référence
- publications non déposées publiées par les organismes gouvernementaux, les laboratoires et les centres de recherche
- publications d'organismes à but non lucratif, d'établissements d'enseignement et de groupes de recherche
- certaines monographies et publication en série publiées par Statistique Canada

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.

Index des dénominations sociales: donne un accès par dénominations sociales fondées sur les vedettes d'autorité du service Canadiana.

Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur.

Index des matières: des descripteurs fondés sur les vedettes matières des documents Library of Congress Subject Headings et Canadian Subject Headings sont associés à chaque publication; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces documents sont disponibles par le biais d'un abonnement permanent et ils sont aussi intégrés à une collection rétrospective.

Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés.

ACCÈS ÉLECTRONIQUE

Le fichier complet de l'Index de recherche du Canada, de 1982 à aujourd'hui, est disponible sous forme électronique à partir de la plate-forme SilverPlatter SPIRS. Il est offert sur CD-ROM et il est possible d'obtenir des licences d'utilisation en réseau pour un serveur local ou pour un serveur SilverPlatter ERL. Il est également disponible par le biais d'un abonnement Internet. Les rapports peuvent être commandés par l'intermédiaire du National Technical Information Service aux États-Unis ou encore directement au Global Information Centre de IHS/Micromedia. Tous les documents catalogués publiés par Statistique Canada sont intégrés dans les versions électroniques de l'Index de recherche du Canada. Pour plus de détails, contactez le personnel de IHS/Micromedia au 1 800 387-2689.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

Le numéro d'accès unique de Microlog est la clé qui permet de repérer immédiatement tout document. La majorité des documents cités dans l'Index de recherche du Canada sont offerts par le service d'abonnement aux microfiches de Microlog. Les organismes peuvent s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de l'Index. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de IHS/Micromedia. # Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

1991 Ontario Travel Monitor survey : report of detailed findings

Toronto : Ministry of Culture, Tourism & Recreation, 1994. 200 p. ISSN 1188-9965
MICROLOG 97-06527 (3 fiche)

Reports results of a telephone survey of Ontario residents designed to measure travel volume, value, and trip characteristics of all travel emanating from those residents during 1991. The study monitored travel on a monthly basis by gathering information on all qualifying trips ending in the reporting month, incidences of overnight and same-day travel, incidence of overnight travel during the full year preceding the reporting month, and anticipated travel during the three months following the reporting month. Survey methodology is described and results are presented for: travel expenditure estimates; 1991 travel patterns, including lengths of stay, travel party size, and purposes of trips; person-nights spent in Ontario regions; incidence of prepaid expenditures inside and outside the province; total Ontario expenditures; 1991 regional and quarterly summaries; and travel incidence, intentions, and demographic characteristics of respondents. A copy of the survey questionnaire is appended.

In Sparrow, the Supreme Court of Canada considered for the first time the scope of section 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, which recognizes and affirms the aboriginal and treaty rights of aboriginal peoples of Canada. Significantly, the court made it clear that the rights recognized and affirmed by section 35 are not absolute and outlined a test whereby the Crown may justify legislation that infringes on aboriginal rights. This document is a summary of the cases about aboriginal fishing rights as well as the rulings of the Supreme Court of Canada in Lewis and Nikal, which examined "on reserve" fishing issues.

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) is a fatal, communicable disease of pandemic proportions caused by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). The number of women and their new-born children who are affected is growing rapidly. AIDS is, moreover, distinct from other human diseases because complex social, legal, and political phenomena surround its medical and scientific aspects. This review summarizes some of the issues of a primarily legal nature, including discrimination, immigrants and visitors to Canada, federal prisons, criminal law and civil litigation.

As its name suggests, AIDS involves the breakdown of the body's immune system, leaving the victim vulnerable to unusual and fatal diseases. The virus that is now believed to cause AIDS, the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, was discovered in 1983. The virus is unusual, its mode of action is not fully understood, and there are no really effective treatments for AIDS/HIV. This document looks at the medical and scientific aspects of AIDS.

Aircraft evacuation tests, an initial assessment of the influence of various aisle configurations and lighting conditions under different evacuation scenarios

Describes a study whose objective was to investigate the influence of changes to aisle configuration and interior/exterior lighting on the rate at which passengers could evacuate an aircraft. The configurations evaluated involved a conventional single straight aisle and an aisle with a jog or kink. Participants were recruited from the public to perform a series of simulated emergency evacuations under two protocols (competitive and co-operative evacuations). Evacuations were documented using video cameras which had internal time bases, providing information on the time taken for each individual to evacuate and the order in which the participants disembarked. Results presented indicated an optimum condition for the evacuation of passengers under the scenarios tested.

Presents Provincial Health Council findings regarding the ability of the business plans of Alberta Health, and the regional and provincial health authorities, to provide the necessary vision, leadership, and management to bring about health reform in the province. The first section examines the Alberta Health Business Plan, summarizing a review of the Plan that involved interviews with organization representatives and a questionnaire survey. It studies the role of the Plan in the context of health reform, the Plan's relationship to the business plans of the other health authorities, and the Plan's adequacy in providing leadership, guidance, and delegation of authority. The second section reviews the regional and provincial health authorities business planning process with regard to such matters as health system vision, communication, governance, and funding. Concludes with recommendations concerning the planning process.

This report describes the conduct of a project to compile data on alcohol use by persons fatally injured in motor vehicle accidents occurring on or off public highways in Canada. Data are obtained from police-reported information on the characteristics of the victim and details of the fatal motor accident; and coroners' and medical examiners' files for objective, toxicological data from body fluid samples. The focus of the report is on alcohol in fatally injured drivers with a secondary focus on alcohol in fatally injured pedestrians. The report contains general descriptive information on the frequency and quantity of alcohol found in drivers and pedestrians fatally injured in motor vehicle collisions and trends in alcohol detected among fatally injured operators of automobiles, motorcycles, trucks, vans, and tractor-trailers and among fatally injured pedestrians. Data on alcohol use by drivers are presented separately for each province and territory. An historical overview of the Fatality Database Project and a description of the project design are provided in an appendix. Statistics are provided in tabular and L'objectif principal du projet est de proposer et d'évaluer des solutions permettant d'augmenter l'autonomie du véhicule utilisé en conditions hivernales. Un modèle de simulation de la consommation électrique et de l'autonomie du véhicule pour différentes températures ambiantes a été élaboré et validé à partir des caractéristiques du véhicule, des résultats de tests et du suivi de journées typiques d'utilisation. Il permet de dresser le bilan des consommations du véhicule, notamment pour la traction, le chauffage et tient compte des pertes des batteries en décharge.

As part of a program to promote transport system safety in the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) countries, this report provides a broad introduction to the technologies which make navigation and communication possible in the air and marine environments. The focus is on navigation, but communications is included to the extent that it supports navigation, surveillance, and management of air and marine traffic. The first chapter reviews global navigation satellite systems, including multimodal, aviation, and marine systems, and the new global positioning system. The second reviews marine navigation and communications, including INMARSAT, automated identification systems, and navigation information management systems. The final chapter considers aviation navigation and communications, both present and new systems for oceanic and domestic air space operations.

In the first phase of the project reported, hazards most likely to produce an oil spill on an Arctic tanker voyage were identified and a preliminary risk assessment was carried out. This report describes the second phase, which focused on several issues shown to have either a particularly high risk component or a deficiency in documented information for risk management decision-making. Phase II provided additional information on environmental sensitivity of areas passed by the tanker; attempted to improve the grouping of sensitivity categories and elements by focusing on civil and natural resources and spill clean-up; analyzed risks of spills at the ship/terminal interface; compared the already identified hazards with those faced by Arctic supply ships; compared spill mitigation measures costs and benefits; analyzed bridge tasks on the tanker to create a preliminary risk model framework; and described oil spill scenarios for three critical areas of the voyage. Appendices include more detailed information including details of an actual tanker voyage between the Bent Horn site on a high Arctic island and Montreal.

Assessing the potential benefits of alternative mussel seed sources for Indian Point Marine Farms

Mussel populations on the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia are a mix of varying proportions of two species, Mytilus edulis and M. trossulus. In recent years, Nova Scotia mussel producers have become concerned about problems associated with M. trossulus, notably the lower meat yield, poor shell appearance, and shell breakage. This report describes a project conducted by one of the province's largest mussel producers, Indian Point Marine Farms (IPMF), to investigate the possibility of obtaining seed from pure populations of M. edulis and thereby producing a higher quality product. Samples of seed were obtained from six natural mussel populations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence region and from two Nova Scotia Atlantic coast populations. The genetic composition of these populations was assessed and their production performance was compared to that of the Lunenburg seed stock currently being used by IPMF. Results are presented and implications of switching to a pure M. edulis stock from the Northumberland Strait region are discussed. AP CA FI LS PR SC

Describes a comprehensive field program undertaken in 1984 to assess the iceberg detection capability of existing marine-type radars. The semi-submersible Sedco 706 drilling platform on the Grand Banks was selected for the trials. It has four radar systems on board, two X-band and two S-band, plus low-noise receivers for increased sensitivity. During the data collection phase, recordings of radar video signals were made for various icebergs, ships, and drilling rigs. Raw video signals from each radar were digitized sequentially and stored on tape for subsequent analysis. Data collected have proven useful in identifying the effect of critical environmental conditions such as ducting and subrefraction, as well as providing valuable information on sea clutter. Describes work conducted to define the inspection requirements and evaluate transducer technologies for ultrasonic inspection of railway rails. The requirement included the need to inspect for bulk defects in the head and web of the rail as well as to characterize the surface and subsurface conditions. After a review of the literature and current developments in the rail inspection field, a set of target defects was identified and promising transducer technologies selected for evaluation on a set of rail samples having known defects. For bulk defects, the library of defects was characterized using conventional ultrasonics and compared with methods using electromagnetics acoustic transducers. Rail surface condition was characterized using surface waves to detect surface cracks and roughness. The work established the feasibility of using the transducers for surface, subsurface, and bulk defect detection and characterization. CA ND PS SC TR

By Lucie Parrot...et al. ; prepared for Transportation Development Centre of Transport Canada and Transports Québec. Montreal : The Centre, 1996. xiii, 80 p. : Ill. MICROLOG 97-06793 (1 fiche)

Documents a study concerning the optimal storage of de-icing salt used on Quebec highways. Begins with a review of the properties of road salt that are relevant to storage and handling, and of the existing salt storage systems in use in the Quebec highway system. Current handling and storage practices are discussed, strengths and weaknesses are analyzed, needs are identified, and system requirements and specifications for a salt storage and loading system are described. This is followed by a description of salt storage and loading systems currently in operation in other countries, focusing on those best designed to meet Quebec transport ministry requirements as determined in the previous needs analysis. Five systems are short-listed for further assessment, including the existing system (rectangular warehouses and igloos), silos, vaults, and conveyor-equipped warehouses. Recommendations are made for suitable salt storage/handling

Les Besoins des immigrants, des réfugiés et des femmes des minorités raciales en matière de services de santé : rapport des consultations communautaires

MICROLOG 97-06564 (1 fiche)

Le Bureau pour la santé des femmes a entrepris une consultation communautaire dans le but de déterminer les stratégies qui permettraient de résoudre les problèmes d'accessibilité des services de santé éprouvés par les immigrants, les réfugiés et les femmes des minorités raciales en Ontario. Cette consultation s'est déroulée dans les villes suivantes des six circonscriptions sanitaires de la province : Ottawa, Thunder Bay, London, Windsor, Sudbury et Toronto. Ce document, et d'autres documents récents du ministère de la Santé, appuie l'idée d'une approche globale de la santé en vertu de laquelle la promotion de la santé et la prévention de la maladie sont des éléments essentiels. Le rapport porte précisément sur les besoins des immigrants, des réfugiés et des femmes des minorités raciales en matière de services de santé.

Biotite dissolution and oxygen consumption in aqueous media at 100 C

By Peter Taylor and Derrek G. Owen. Pinawa, MB : Whiteshell Laboratories, 1997. 66 p. : ill., Bibl. (AECL research / Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. ; AECL-11571 ISSN 0067-0367)
ISBN 0-660-16965-7 CCG-P no. CC2-11571E
MICROLOG 97-06641 (1 fiche)

Describes an experimental study of the ability of biotite to consume dissolved oxygen, and hence restore reducing conditions in a nuclear fuel waste vault underground. Experimenters directly measured oxygen consumption and also deduced it from experimental biotite dissolution rates. After a review of biotite dissolution mechanisms, including the stoichiometry of dissolution and alteration, results are presented from experiments on granitic biotite from the Lac du Bonnet (Manitoba) region and on magnetite with respect to their rates of oxygen consumption.

Reviews field experiments investigating the number and viability of black spruce seeds that had been deposited through normal seed dispersal and remained stored in the surface horizons of a typical peatland soil in northern Ontario. In one experiment, sowing was conducted in three conditions: an overmature, uncut black spruce stand; and adjacent clear-cut area; and a part of the same clear-cut that had been subsequently burned. Results are reported by stand condition and for five soil depths. In two other experiments, black spruce seeds were carefully placed on the surface and at various depths, and seed viability was determined by collecting seed from all depths at various intervals (up to 22 months) after placement. Management implications of the results are discussed.

Boot camps, based on a military basic training model stressing discipline and physical conditioning, have been in operation in the United States for over 15 years. In Canada, these have been considered as strict discipline options for young offenders. What are boot camps intended to achieve? have they succeeded in meeting their objectives? This paper will consider these questions through a brief discussion of the development of U.S. boot camps and an examination of the findings from evaluation research on their effectiveness as measured by recidivism rates.

Presents and discusses results of systematic aerial surveys conducted in the southern Beaufort Sea during August and September 1984 to document the abundance and distribution of bowhead whales in relation to industrial activity. Surface oceanographic conditions during the survey are described using satellite imagery analyses and in-situ temperature data from industry vessels. Bowhead sightings from four additional systematic aerial surveys of the region in July and early August 1984 are also discussed. Hypotheses are formulated to explain observed variations in bowhead abundance and distribution.

The Buck stops here, reflections on moral responsibility, democratic accountability and military values : a study

This study analyzes the ideals of responsibility and accountability, asking such questions as when it is legitimate to blame top officials of an organization for mistakes made by personnel below them in the bureaucratic hierarchy; when things go wrong in a large and complex organization like the Canadian Forces, who is responsible and accountable; and whether a plea of ignorance is a good excuse. The study also analyzes the doctrine of ministerial responsibility in both the British and Canadian parliamentary traditions, asking whether it is realistic to expect that a government minister should be held responsible for everything that goes wrong in his/her department. Finally, traditional military values are examined, considering the kinds of attitudes and values expected from Canada's armed forces and the differences between the military and civilian sectors.

Building a safer Canada : a community based crime prevention manual

Ottawa : Dept. of Justice Canada, 1996. 45 p. : ill. MICROLOG 97-06401 (1 fiche)

This manual presents a planning model that can be used to design and carry out problem-oriented community crime prevention programs. Steps are described for the following phases of a program: identification and evaluation of a community's crime-related problems (the research stage); developing an action plan (the strategic planning stage); carrying out the action plan (the action stage); and monitoring and evaluation of the program (the assessment stage). The appendix includes a sample questionnaire for use in gathering community crime-related information.

Specialised livestock arrangements can encourage more efficient farm management by maximising available resources. This publication begins with an outline of the advantages and drawbacks of a specialised livestock arrangement and the points to consider when entering into such an arrangement. Types of agreements are then reviewed, including custom hiring and leasing, joint ventures or partnerships, corporations, and co-operatives. Examples are provided to illustrate the contribution approach to handling such agreements, as well as the different types of specialised livestock arrangements. The examples include sample agreement forms.

New Brunswick's vision of the future is one of self-sufficiency and prosperity for all of its citizens. The province has developed an economic development strategy to realize that vision. The Ministerial Advisory Committee on Multiculturalism proposes that ethnocultural diversity is critical if we are to succeed in a rapidly changing world. This brief summarizes the framework for New Brunswick's economic development strategy and some of the changes we are facing. It then outlines trends in demographics, trade, tourism and life in New Brunswick which will impact on the province's future success.

Presents a study of the business resources and capabilities in northern Canada, of the types of goods and services required now and in the future by oil and gas companies operating in that region, and of areas of opportunity for northern businesses in oil and gas industry markets. Study methodology placed special emphasis on obtaining first-hand information on northern supplier characteristics and constraints, and on oil/gas industry activity and purchasing practices. The study was oriented toward identifying incremental opportunities for northern companies to extend their sales or generate new sales to oil/gas company markets, and makes specific recommendations to that end. Oil and gas company purchasing profiles are presented for the exploration and production phases of development. Northern business characteristics are reviewed by sector and important supply issues are assessed. The appendix includes business profiles of major northern business centres such as Whitehorse, Yellowknife, Norman Wells, and Inuvik.

Au Canada, on a commencé à envisager cette formule comme peine de discipline de fer pour les jeunes contrevenants. Quels sont les objectifs des camps de type militaires? Ont-ils réussi à les atteindre? Dans ce document, on répond à ces questions en faisant brièvement l'historique des camps de ce type aux États-Unis et en examinant les constatations des chercheurs qui ont évalué leur efficacité pour diminuer la population carcérale ou les taux de récidive.

The goal of FRDA II is to promote the sustainable development of the forest resources of British Columbia. The seven FRDA II programs are designed to support sustainability by enhancing the environmental health of the forests, stimulating the economic and social prosperity of British Columbia and Canada, and addressing the future growth of the forest community. The seven programs are: sustainable forest development (tending forests, integrated resource management, hardwood management, silvicultural systems, forest resource inventory); communications and extension (public information and forest education, extension and technology transfer); research in sustainable development (forest renewal research, growth and yield and stand tending research, integrated resource management research, forest protection research, advanced forest technologies research); small scale forestry (focusing on encouraging and practicing enhanced management of all forest resources on small private, municipal, native and federal lands); opportunity identification (examines position of forest sector relative to markets and international competitiveness, provides support in market development); economic and social analysis (collects and analyzes data on the current state of the forest sector, strategic studies and operational studies); and co-ordination, implementation and evaluation (co-ordinates cost sharing and fiscal management). This annual report presents highlights of achievements made in all programs for the fiscal year.

For over three decades the federal government has used transfer payments to help the provinces carry out their responsibilities in terms of health, post-secondary education and public assistance. This paper examines the overall operation of the new financing mechanism and attempts to assess its possible repercussions, primarily in the health area. The first part of the paper takes a brief look at the background and operation of EPF and CAP and the second part describes the nature and general operation of CHST. The third and last part analyzes the possible consequences of CHST for public finances at the provincial level, provincial health care expenditures and federal government enforcement of national health standards.

Documents procedures used in deriving the national biomass inventory and gives examples of results. The purpose of the inventory is to provide efficient and timely estimates of the above-ground biomass components on forest land in Canada, building on existing data and knowledge to generate spatially referenced biomass estimates for use in carbon budget modeling and resource assessment. For high productivity forest, volume/biomass conversion factors are derived for unique combinations of site class and age class by species within provinces. Biomass estimates for low productivity forests are given by ecoregions within each province.

Describes a study carried out in 1984 in the southern Beaufort Sea to determine the frequency of ice scour events and to examine the physical changes in a number of selected scours. To identify new ice scours and to determine scour impact rates, a baseline network of good-quality side-scan sonar information was developed for different areas of the Beaufort Sea shelf, incorporating control areas and corridors having the highest degrees of petroleum industry activity. Where overlap occurred with areas surveyed before 1984, interim scour impact rates were calculated. Echo sounding traverses across a given ice scour event at several locations provided data from which transverse and longitudinal scour profiles were constructed. The relationship of scour depth and water depth was also examined, as well as the length, width, and orientation of specific ice scours.

The objective of the project reported is to support the development of techniques and technology to minimize search time and resource requirements, and to maximize the speed and effectiveness of Canadian search and rescue (SAR) operations. Specific objectives of the first phase were to establish the different components influencing the accuracy of the drift of SAR objects (life rafts and small boats), to determine the data required to be collected, and to develop the data analysis methodology. Data were used from experiments carried out 1992-94 to test how well the CANSARP model predictions against known target positions, to generate performance indicators, and to produce and display summary tabular and graphical information for comparison. Recommendations are also made on how to proceed with more extensive CANSARP evaluations.

Un tsunami s'abattit sur la péninsule Burin, à Terre-Neuve, en début de soirée, le 18 novembre 1929, après le tremblement de terre de magnitude 7,2 qui se produisit à 17 h 02 HNT dans la zone sismique du Talus Laurentien. Ce rapport propose que le personnel de la planification des mesures d'urgence mette au point une stratégie selon laquelle l'alerte au tsunami serait donnée lorsqu'un tremblement de terre de forte intensité secoue le sud de Terre-Neuve. Il recommande que ces personnes passent en revue le plan des mesures d'urgence tous les deux ans, pour que les nouvelles recrues ou le personnel affecté en rotation se familiarisent avec la marche à suivre. Bien que ce soit la première fois que l'on s'appuie sur l'histoire orale pour délimiter la zone du jet de rive d'un tsunami au Canada, cette technique pourrait aussi bien s'appliquer au ondes de tempête, au seiches et au crues de rivières, ainsi qu'aux autres tsunamis, comme celui qui s'est produit à Port Alberni (C.-B.), en mars 1964, ou aux autres villages de la péninsule Burin qui ont été touchés par le Tsunami de 1929.

The Institute aims to provide leadership in the battle against mental illness. It strives to improve the quality of life for people affected by mental illness through innovative research, effective clinical care, and dissemination of knowledge. This annual report provides information on activities over the past year. Includes the collaboration with various hospitals around Toronto, presents information on severe mental illness, transferring knowledge from research to practice, and research from the laboratory to the community. The mind-body connection is discussed, as well as the value of consumers and families, increasing psychiatric help to smaller isolated communities in Ontario through on-line, at-home and fly-in services, alternative therapies, and child and youth mental health. Financial statements are included, as well as a list of sources of research funding, and publications produced by the Institute.

Il n'est pas toujours facile d'identifier les mousses, même en utilisant un microscope et une clé d'identification. Bien que certaines espèces puissent être identifiées directement sur le terrain, d'autres peuvent être confondues, même lorsqu'on utilise des instruments de précision, en raison du nombre élevé de caractéristiques qu'elles ont en commun. De plus, les critères taxonomiques ne font pas toujours l'unanimité auprès des spécialistes. Cet ouvrage a donc pour but de synthétiser l'information relative aux caractères morphologiques des sphaignes et de leur habitats spécifiques afin de faciliter leur identification directement sur le terrain.

Edited by: Stéphan Gagné, Les McCagg. Ottawa : Co-operatives Secretariat, 1997. v. 30 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 97-06602 (1 fiche)

A co-operative is a form of business, incorporated to meet economic, social and/or cultural needs with an objective of service rather than profit. It is owned by members/users who control the enterprise on the basis of one member one vote through an elected board of directors charged with responsibility for management carried out by a hired staff. This document discusses producer, consumer, & workers' co-operatives in Canada. It provides an overview, then statistical tables & graphs provide information on finances, volume of business, balance sheets, membership, products, equity, growth trends, & more.

Cognitive skills requirements for authorized operating personnel at CANDU nuclear generating stations

By Randall J. Mumaw and Gareth Gabrys. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, Regulatory Research & Support Program, 1996. ix, 102 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Canada. Atomic Energy Control Board ; INFO-0664)
MICROLOG 97-06406 (2 fiche)

Describes a project involving the application of a systematic approach to the identification and training of cognitive skills for nuclear generating station (NGS) operators. The early sections of the report describe the nature of cognitive skills and place them within a decision making model. A set of generic performance expectations is reviewed and the review is used to determine the extent to which these expectations overlap with the cognitive skills previously identified by the model. The middle sections provide recommendations on using a full-scope, high-fidelity NGS simulator to train operators on cognitive skills. These recommendations are directed at both simulator scenario design and the use of the simulator for activities other than complete scenarios, such as part-task training. The remaining sections present guidelines and a framework for designing a complete training program that includes cognitive skills. Training techniques are reviewed which have been shown potential for success in areas other than nuclear power, and specific recommendations are offered to improve the Pickering B NGS operator training program.

A Comparative operating cost analysis for the plastic industry

Prepared by the Boyd Company ; for the New Brunswick Department of Economic Development and Tourism. Princeton, NJ : The Company, 1997. v. 37 p.
MICROLOG 97-06646 (1 fiche)

Presents and analyzes major operating costs scaled to a representative moulded plastics products plant in New Brunswick, with comparisons to selected manufacturing sites in the United States. Costs not varying significantly with geography were not considered. The analysis focuses on those key geographically-variable cost elements considered to be fundamental to the plastics industry competitiveness, such as labour, utilities, amortization, property taxes, and transportation. Overall costs are scaled to a hypothetical 100,000-square-foot plant having 300 employees and shipping over the road to key market cities in the United States and Canada.

Offshore oil and gas development in Atlantic Canada will involve construction of onshore facilities as well as onshore construction of structures for offshore installation. These activities will generate substantial levels of employment and may have significant impacts on communities in the Atlantic provinces. This report attempts to provide a frame of reference for assessing the scale and implications of such projects. It contains a body of data allowing direct comparisons among recent major construction projects familiar to Atlantic province residents, such as oil refineries and power plants, and the proposed Venture and Hibernia offshore developments. Included in the comparative data considered relevant for developing the frame of reference are project schedules, capital costs, employment requirements, and social impacts. The report also contains descriptive profiles of each of the projects.

Conflict of interest is one aspect of public sector ethics. Over the past 20 years, Canadian legislatures and governments have developed legislation and codes of conduct that show a wide variety of approaches to the issue. This paper focuses on the most important developments at the federal level. The emphasis is on federal legislators but other federal public officials, such as public servants, judges, and members of administrative agencies, tribunals and Crown corporations are also affected by conflict of interest rules.

La question des conflits d'intérêts est l'un des éléments qui touche à l'éthique. Au cours des 20 dernières années, les gouvernements et les assemblées législatives du Canada ont élaboré des lois et des codes de conduite qui prévoient toute une gamme de mesures visant à éviter les conflits d'intérêts. Ce document ne traite que des mesures les plus importantes adoptées au palier fédéral. Il porte principalement sur les législateurs fédéraux. Toutefois, d'autres titulaires de charges publiques sont visés par les règles sur les conflits d'intérêts, entre autres, les fonctionnaires, les juges et les membres d'organismes administratifs, de tribunaux et de sociétés d'État.

Part I summarizes the principal impressions of S&T reform in China as perceived by mission participants, the main debates on Chinese S&T policy encountered during the mission, issues deserving of greater attention, and observation on current S&T policy as articulated in a 1995 decision on S&T progress. Part II provides detailed observations of the mission, starting with a lengthier discussion of the mission's understanding of the S&T reform process and of the concept of a national system of innovation. Commentary is then given on five specific areas of priority attention: basic research; the high technology sector; state-owned enterprises; agricultural research and rural development; and environmental and social development. Part III summarizes discussions and debates on Parts I and II, held in four cities and with the participation of various S&T policy stakeholders.

This report is an aid to those responsible for deciding whether an oil well blow-out should be ignited or extinguished (if already burning) in order to protect the environment. The first section reviews the types and characteristics of blowouts that may occur in Canada lands (offshore waters or land in the north) as a result of petroleum exploration or production. It includes information on near-source behaviour of oil, condensate, natural gas, and hydrogen sulphide, and predicts dimensions of oil or condensate slicks, explosion zones, and hazard zones for surface and subsea blowouts over a wide range of flow rates. The second section describes effects of igniting the well products and predicts combustion efficiencies, radiant heat fluxes, and secondary effects for surface and subsea blowouts. The third section presents an overview of well control techniques. The fourth section reviews several actual blowouts and reasons behind the decisions taken. A review of blow-out statistics as they relate to the consequences of well ignition, the time frame of ignition, and the incidence of burning blowouts is also presented. The fifth section delineates the key decision making factors that must be addressed when considering ignition or extinguishment of a blow-out. The final section contains check lists of factors to be reviewed prior to making a decision regarding a blow-out.

An algorithm to compute automatically the principal marketing traits in beef cattle from ultrasound images of live animals has been developed and implemented in computer software. These traits (back fat thickness, rib-eye area, and percent lean meat yield) provide estimates of carcass grading specifications defined by established standards. This report outlines the background to this development, the objectives of the software development project, and presents results from phase III of the project. These results are reviewed with regard to: demonstration of the capability of the software to predict lean meat yield and marbling; the impact on the software package of the proposed new Canadian grading system on feedlot management strategy; and field tests at bull test stations to increase market awareness of the software package.

Le système d'éducation en Ontario doit évoluer de telle façon qu'il reflète les changements de notre société. Ce document examine cinq domaines principaux : l'éducation communautaire, le programme d'études, la formation du personnel enseignant, la violence dans les écoles et les défis que doivent relever les jeunes filles et les femmes qui reprennent leurs études. On présente dans la plupart des sections des recommandations sur la façon de réaliser l'égalité entre les filles et les garçons dans les écoles. Bien que l'on reconnaisse que certaines enseignantes et certains enseignants, des écoles et des conseils scolaires s'occupent des questions relatives à l'équité, il est clair que le gouvernement doit fournir des encouragements et entreprendre des contrôles pour s'assurer que des initiatives sont mises en oeuvre dans toute la province.

Pendant de nombreuses années on s'est interrogé sur les coûts de l'éducation dispensée aux étudiants étrangers et à savoir qui devrait payer la note. Les discussions portaient principalement sur les frais de scolarité et sur l'adoption de frais différentiels pour les étudiants étrangers. Tout au moins, la province devrait s'assurer que les frais différentiels qui s'appliquent aux étudiants étrangers sont maintenus au niveau minimum de façon à ce que le Nouveau-Brunswick puisse rester compétitif dans le recrutement des étudiants étrangers. Ce mémoire expose sommairement certains facteurs que la province du Nouveau-Brunswick devrait considérer en établissant des barèmes de frais différentiels.

New information and communication technologies (ICTs) are creating or supporting innovative systems and networks that are increasingly affecting societies and their governments, industries, communities, and individuals. This publication describes a workshop conducted to determine whether the techniques of scenario planning could provide useful insights into the future impacts of ICTs on development and could inform the public policy choices now facing governments and development agencies. It reviews such ICT-related issues as technologies and services, economics, regulation, international frameworks, and government responsibilities, and develops four scenarios (to the year 2010 or 2015) that envisage possible futures for ICT and development. Scenarios vary according to the degree of openness of the global community to ICT and the type of response from developing countries (proactive or reactive) to ICT acquisition and use.

Describes a study of the effects of nozzle pressure, nozzle flow rate, and nozzle-to-water separation on the ability of high-pressure water jets to disperse oil slicks. With the objective of developing an efficient, ship-based oil dispersing system using the high-pressure water jet mixing concept, 65 large-scale laboratory tests simulating ship speeds of 1 to 3 metres/second were conducted at jet pressures of 7,000 to 50,000 kilopascals, flow rates of up to 45 litres/minute, and using an Alberta sweet mixed crude oil with Corexit 9527 dispersant. Test procedures are described and water jet dispersion efficiencies are given in terms of percent total oil dispersed in the form of droplets less than 200 microns in diameter, plotted against nozzle flow rate and pressure for each of three speeds and nozzle heights. Trends identified by those plots are discussed. For comparison, laboratory experiments were also conducted with the Warren Spring Laboratory breaker board system.

Describes research conducted to develop lentil germplasm with resistance to ascochyta blight and anthracnose, two major diseases affecting lentil production in Canada. Over 500 crosses have been made since 1993 to develop resistance to those two diseases in lentils, while retaining marketable characteristics such as large seed size. New sources of resistance were sought and identified, and each was evaluated in a yield performance trial as soon as sufficient seed became available. Releases of disease resistant cultivars are reported and a multi-year summary of results is included which shows the relative yield performance of all lines in a 1996 co-operative trial in western Canada.

Describes a sediment sampling and analysis program carried out at two offshore oil sites near Sable Island. The program was carried out to monitor the characteristics, behaviour, and fate of hydrocarbons introduced into the benthic environment by the use of oil-based drilling muds. The report describes the methods used for extraction and gas chromatographic analysis of aliphatic and aromatic hydrocarbon content in the samples collected before and after the discharge of oiled cuttings at each site. Summary tables and figures delineate the spread of oil from each wellhead and detailed results of each analysis are presented. Results of the field studies are compared to those of a computer model which simulated the dispersion and fate of the cuttings. Reasons for discrepancies between field and model studies are discussed.

This study examines the spatial distribution, relative abundance, and age segregation of bowhead whales in relation to petroleum industry activities and oceanographic features in the south-east Beaufort Sea during the 1985 open water season. Surface oceanographic conditions at the time of the aerial surveys (August-September) are described using satellite imagery analyses and in-situ temperature and wind data from industry vessels. Aerial photographic surveys provided information on the age/size class distribution and site tenacity of bowhead whales within the study area. Bowhead sightings recorded by other researchers working in that area during 1985 are also examined. Comparisons are made with results of previous bowhead whale surveys in the area.

The grounding events were identified through extensive analyses of iceberg tracks logged by drill rig radars and shore-based radars and by satellite telemetry, and via information obtained from International Ice Patrol records and repair records of submarine cables broken by icebergs. Criteria for identifying iceberg grounding events are given and identified iceberg grounding events are presented in subsections for each data set which meet those criteria. Analysis of grounding data considers such matters as frequency of grounding, location of grounding events, grounding duration, and mass and draft of grounded icebergs.

A national network for ecosystem monitoring and assessment has been proposed to provide integrated ecological information for use in determining ecological consequences of various environmental stresses. In the Atlantic Maritime Ecozone, Kejimikujik National Park has been proposed as a candidate site for this network, since it is protected from development which may endanger long-term monitoring and assessment, is generally representative of the Ecozone, and has a key role in the acid precipitation monitoring network. This report discusses past, current, and future monitoring activity at the Park. The park site is described in terms of its spatial representativeness, science partnerships, and other aspects which suit its inclusion as part of a national ecosystem monitoring network. The appendix includes: a list of current research projects in the Park area; a brief chronology of Park events; and an extensive bibliography on the aquatic and terrestrial effects of acid precipitation.

Saskatchewan Institute of Applied Science & Technology. Research & Development. Saskatoon, SK : The Institute, 1997. 51 p. : ill., Bibl.

This report provides the setting in which the Saskatchewan economy operates and outlines some of the major trends that impact on labour market training needs. Sections of the report cover the following topics: world demographics; the Canadian economy; Saskatchewan economic overview, including sectors exhibiting growth; Saskatchewan demographics; the Aboriginal population; the Saskatchewan labour force, including unemployment, employment by industry and occupation, and future outlook; and general trends that impact on training needs, including work force diversity, continuous learning, and the match between skills and job requirements. The final section analyzes the implications of the previous sections for the Saskatchewan Institute of Applied Science & Technology.

Effectiveness of the repeat application of chemical dispersants on oil

By Randy Belore. Ottawa : Environmental Studies Revolving Funds, 1985. iv, 66 p. : ill. (Environmental Studies Revolving Funds report / Environmental Studies Revolving Funds (Canada) ; no. 006) ISBN 0-920783-05-8

When a chemical dispersant is applied to an oil slick and only partially removes oil from the surface, it is important to know whether a second application will be effective in dispersing the remaining oil, since it is possible that a second application will not be effective due to chemical property changes in the remaining surface oil. This report describes large-scale laboratory tests conducted to determine the validity of this suggestion. Oil slick dispersal efficiencies were measured after the first and second applications of a chemical dispersant in seven tests using two different test procedures, one with background mixing and one without.

The objectives of the study reported in this document were: to review the environmental effects monitoring programs conducted in conjunction with offshore hydrocarbon developments in the Gulf of Mexico, North Sea, and Alaska; to evaluate the merits and shortcomings of monitoring programs conducted in these areas; to develop a complete monitoring strategy for east coast Canadian offshore areas south of the 60th parallel; and to recommend specific monitoring programs to accompany development of oil reserves on the Grand Banks and gas reserves on the Scotian Shelf. Relevant monitoring techniques reviewed include water column monitoring, benthic chemical and biological monitoring, and microbial monitoring. Operational and environmental considerations for monitoring program design are discussed, such as zones of influence, sampling grids, biological receptors, and program management.

Describes a field study of overall soil disturbance levels resulting from ground-based harvesting using two methods of skidroad location. The study was conducted on seven treatment units in three different clear-cut blocks in the Golden Forest District, British Columbia, three units located in the interior cedar-hemlock biogeoclimatic zone and four within the Engelmann spruce-subalpine fir zone. The report discusses the effects of clear-cut harvesting operations on the physical and chemical properties of the forest soils and on micro-climatic characteristics across a range of steep slope sites, and evaluates seedling (western larch, Engelmann spruce, lodgepole pine) performance after three growing seasons on various types of disturbance (haul roads, landings, fire guards, skidroads, skid trails, deep gouges, and deposits). Sections 3 to 5 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantee basic democratic rights: the right to vote; the right to stand for office; the regular sitting of federal and provincial legislative bodies; and the requirement that elections be held every five years except in times of war or insurrection. Bill C-114, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, came into force on May 6, 1993, and affected a number of electoral issues that have been the subject of Charter challenges. ### Embryo transfer in big horn, Ovis canadensis, sheep

Expansion in the Saskatchewan bighorn sheep industry has not occurred at the same rapid pace as the elk industry. The greatest obstacle to expansion is the slow rate at which herds can be multiplied, since ewes typically have only one lamb per year and there is limited opportunity for wild capture. This paper examines the possibility of increasing bighorn sheep populations in Saskatchewan through embryo transfer technology. It describes an experiment undertaken to determine the viability of transferring a fertilized embryo from a bighorn ewe into a bighorn/domestic sheep cross which would serve as a surrogate to carry the embryo to term. Details on the background, procedure, and results associated with the experiment are provided. LS MS PR SC

Energy-efficient light trailer engineering design

Reduction of the tare weight of logging trailers would enable increased payloads and reduction in energy consumption in forestry operations. This report describes the design and development of a lightweight logging trailer using specially developed computer software based on finite element theory. The software allows building of a conceptual trailer frame made of main, side, and cross beams. A pre-processor then generates input data required for calculation of stresses and deflections at various locations on the trailer frame. Results from the design were validated by comparison with stresses and deflections calculated for a candidate trailer using the ANSYS stress analysis software package and by comparing with results from experimental model testing conducted on the candidate trailer. Field testing during typical logging transport operations was also carried out on three candidate trailers. A prototype light trailer was then manufactured using the trailer design software, and field-tested to evaluate its structural integrity in real-life situations. CA FO ND SC TR

Enhancement of the radar detectability of icebergs

Describes a study undertaken to investigate the use of enhancement techniques to increase the radar detectability of icebergs. Begins with a literature review on iceberg tracking and a theoretical evaluation of existing methods of iceberg detection, as a basis for subsequent evaluation of the effectiveness of different enhancement techniques. This is followed by details of enhancement and tracking systems which could be utilized with icebergs. The systems are separated into three main categories based on iceberg size (growler/berg bit, small/medium icebergs, large/very large icebergs). Two essential types of strategies are involved: passive, to increase the iceberg's effective echoing area or radar cross-section, and active techniques such as satellite tracking systems. Each tracking technique is analysed from the point of view of increased tracking range for a high probability of detection and the costs and benefits associated with the enhancement. CA ND PS SC

The purpose of this document is to re-examine the nature and extent of the interaction between aquatic and riparian areas and to present an approach for designating fisheries management and reserve zones in urban/suburban settlement areas of coastal British Columbia. The methodology is stratified and proposes establishment of two zones, based on distances required to protect various habitat features and functions. The scale and timing for zone establishment are linked to community and settlement planning processes. The first zone is a fisheries management zone (FMZ), established on the basis of existing map information and watershed data. The second zone is the fisheries reserve zone (FRZ), the area immediately adjacent to watercourses or wetlands, representing a local refinement of the FMZ based on site-specific assessments. Example cross-sections are shown to illustrate the spatial extent of the FRZ in a variety of topographic conditions and stream types.

Ottawa : Environnement Canada, 1996. 7, 7 p. Bilingue (Mackenzie Basin Impact Study...). MICROLOG 97-06785 (1 fiche)

La question de l'évolution du climat ne touche pas seulement les conditions météorologiques, la consommation d'énergie ou les émissions de gaz à effet de serre mais s'étend aussi à l'incidence que les changements peuvent avoir sur les écosystèmes, les ressources et les établissements humains de la planète, comme à la nécessité de réduire ou d'éviter ces effets. Les conséquences des changements climatiques seront uniques à chaque région, à chaque pays. Les intervenants régionaux devraient donc avoir un plus grand rôle à jouer dans la conception des stratégies nationales et internationales pour y faire face. Le modèle de collaboration entre scientifiques et intervenants divers qui a été mis au point pour l'étude d'impact sur le bassin du Mackenzie, pourrait bien constituer une façon d'atteindre l'objectif. Removal of frost from wing surfaces at temperatures of -35 degrees C and below is a problem common to many operators in northern Canada. Lack of facilities for application of de-icing fluids, as well as the low temperatures that can prohibit the use of such fluids, preclude frost removal and prevention procedures used at lower latitudes. The objective of the study reported in this document was to provide photographic records and data on the dimensional characteristics of natural frost formations typical of those occurring on aircraft wings at very cold temperatures. The effects of sweeping frosted surfaces were also recorded. The document includes photographs of naturally occurring frost deposits produced on test beds and on operational aircraft wings, as well as photographs of surfaces that were swept. Frost characteristics displayed in the photographs are discussed.

The purpose of this study is to evaluate the methodologies employed in counting and estimating Native harvests, to assess the utility of existing data, and to recommend improvements for future data collection, management, analysis, and use. The primary geographic focus of this study is the Northwest Territories, where comprehensive surveys are currently under way. Special reference is made to northern Quebec because earlier surveys there provided the model for current surveys. Issues discussed include limitations of scope and coverage of surveys, degree of local involvement, survey design, sampling and survey methods, data coding and processing, response bias, verification of results, user needs, participant requirements, and survey co-ordination.

Engineering design work and risk assessment related to subsea oil and gas production facilities located in offshore frontier regions require an understanding of the processes by which sea ice (icebergs, ice ridges) can scour the seabed. To gain such understanding, a number of field measurement programs, laboratory tests, and analytical studies have been conducted in recent years. This report evaluates available deterministic analytical models of ice scouring, compares some observed scours with model predictions, documents current ice-scour research, and makes recommendations on future research priorities. Study effort focused on assessment of currently available deterministic models (force-balance and work-energy models), exercised and compared with a few available field measurements. Deficiencies in the models are noted. The appendix includes abstracts of relevant papers on ice scour, a model calibration and sensitivity study results summary, scour depth predictions from work-energy and dynamic models, and field data from some observed ice scours.

An environmental impact statement of the concept for underground disposal of Canada's nuclear fuel waste included a post-closure assessment case study to estimate the annual effective dose equivalent to members of the public. These estimates were obtained using dose conversion factors (DCFs) based on the 1977 recommendations of the International Commission on Radiation Protection (ICRP). In 1990, the ICRP revised these recommendations based on additional biological information and developments in radiation protection. This report describes a study of how the more recent ICRP recommendations would affect the results of the post-closure assessment case study. It includes a theoretical description of how DCFs are used and a comparison of results from computer simulations using the 1977 and 1990 ICRP recommendations.

An Evaluation of the utility of large-scale economic models for socio-economic impact assessment

MICROLOG 97-06772 (2 fiche)

This report examines the utility of large-scale economic models for examining the socio-economic impact of private and public sector projects within a social impact assessment (SIA) framework. It begins by examining the nature of the SIA in Canada to identify the types of questions and the variables that are normally of interest, and for which large-scale models should be able to assist in developing answers. A set of study models, chosen for their apparent usefulness for SIA work and public availability, is described to review their main conceptual features. These models include econometric, input-output, economic-base, and systems dynamics models. Each model is assessed in terms of a set of characteristics to provide an overview of its capability to deal with SIA questions and issues. Strengths and limitations of multipliers and some issues of interpretation for SIA work are discussed. The features of the different classes of models, and the properties of specific models, especially suited to analyze and assess typical SIA economic impact concerns are identified.

Contains papers from a research conference focusing on a wide range of international topics ranging from broad policy questions to more specific financial market concerns relating to monetary policy and exchange rates. Papers are presented for the four sessions of the conference. The first session examined the influence that alternative exchange rate systems and institutional arrangements can have on the credibility of monetary policy and the performance of the macro economy. The second session studied the suitability of different economic regions for fixed versus flexible exchange rate systems, as well as the effect that different exchange rate regimes have on the dynamics of the business cycle. The third session examined the interaction of chartists and fundamentalists in the exchange market and the efficacy of alternative modelling techniques for hedging foreign exchange risk. The final session tested the effectiveness of central bank intervention using daily exchange market data.

The power flow finite element analysis (PFEEA) method uses a heat-conduction analogy for vibrational energy flow in the high frequency vibratory response prediction of structural elements and systems. This report documents the continuing development of the PFEEA method, focusing on generalization of previously identified models for energy transmission through structural junctions and formulation of new models for more advanced junction configurations. It presents an energy transmission model for 3-dimensional beam junctions, along with modelling results and discussion of the implementation of general plate and reinforced plate junction models. A methodology for determining energy transmission characteristics through a complex junction of plates is then described and applied to a corner junction of three plates. Energy transmission characteristics of directly excited beam-plate systems are investigated, and a power flow model for flexural wave energy propagation is developed. Results are given for a selection of test problems including models of a frame, plate, stiffened plate, and ring-stiffened cylinder. The frequency range of validity for PFEEA is discussed for each. The use of PFEEA in fluid-structure interaction problems is discussed and recommendations are made for further advancement of the PFEEA method.

On March 11, 1997 the Standing Committee on Citizenship and Immigration began a study of Canada's foreign worker policy, focusing in particular on the needs of the information technology industry. The essence of the Committee's study may be stated in five questions: what are the short and medium-term employment needs of Canada's information technology industry; can the need for workers be met from our domestic labour market; if not, what impediments exist to the timely recruitment of foreign workers; how can these impediments be overcome; and, how should the long-term skilled labour needs of the industry be addressed?

This study documents the responses of families living in Newfoundland to the rotational patterns of work associated with offshore oil and gas employment. The study approach included a literature review of family adaptation to spousal absence, a questionnaire survey of about 40% of the married offshore work force and their spouses resident in Newfoundland in July 1985, and detailed personal interviews with 23 couples and eight individuals from among those who had received questionnaires. Survey results presented include the demographic and occupational characteristics of the studied families; male and female reactions to offshore work; and male and female experiences and adjustments at work and in the home environment. Differences in responses are noted between those who view the work and work pattern positively from those who view it negatively. Recommendations are provided in seven categories to address difficulties identified in the study.

The Feasibility of directly dating quartz

Reports a study investigating the feasibility of dating the time of formation or growth of new quartz, with the intent that it could be applied to quartz fibres and fracture fills that form during movement along faults. The dating method involves the use of electron spin resonance (ESR) spectroscopy for detection of paramagnetic centres in quartz, the abundance of which is affected by ionizing radiation. The room temperature ESR spectra of quartz phenocrysts extracted from volcanic rocks of known age were analyzed for the relative intensities of signals associated with two types of paramagnetic centres. Total natural dose of ionizing radiation each sample received was estimated from the concentrations of uranium, thorium, and potassium ages of the host rocks. The relationship is then determined between the paramagnetic centre signal intensity and the differences in gamma and beta doses received since formation, indicating the feasibility of dating geologically old quartz that has absorbed high dose levels of radiation.

Federal-provincial relations impact upon most of the major activities of government in Canada, and are in a state of virtually continuous evolution. Important sources of change are: the election of new governments with new political priorities and conceptions of the federal-provincial process; the social and political environment, which continuously generates new problems and issues; and accumulated experience with ever more complex intergovernmental relationships, which propels both political and institutional adjustment. This paper reviews major developments on the federal-provincial scene, and relates them to ongoing issues and trends. On this basis, it attempts to anticipate probable directions in federal-provincial relations and in evolving institutions.

Describes three experimental crude oil spills of one cubic metre each carried out in pack ice offshore of Cape Breton Island. The spills were conducted to study the behaviour and fate of oil spilled in pack ice conditions (pack ice concentrations of 50 to 90 percent). Specifically, the spills were designed to:

relate oil spreading behaviour to ice conditions; evaluate the fate of oil spilled in leads and brash ice according to processes of evaporation, emulsification, dispersion, and incorporation into or on top of the ice; and identify possible countermeasures strategies for crude oil spills in ice through observation of the oil behaviour. Results are presented with regard to oil spreading as determined by aerial remote sensing; comparison of observed spreading with those predicted by a model; oil drift; oil/ice interactions; changes occurring during weathering; and experience with in-situ burning of the spill.

Brownfield redevelopment (BR) is urban development on an under-utilized site that exhibits economically remediable contamination of its soils and groundwater, and is located in a setting where existing municipal services are readily available. This paper examines the role of the financial services sector (banks, trust companies, insurance brokers, and investment brokers) in BR. After an introduction, chapter 2 defines brownfield sites and considers barriers to BR. Locations, geographic characteristics, quantities, and data sources on brownfield sites across Canada are summarized. Chapter 3 considers factors that created brownfield sites and the role of urban land economics in BR. An overview of the Canadian financial services sector is provided in chapter 4 as well as some of the opportunities and challenges involved in BR. Chapter 5 summarizes strategies undertaken in Canada and elsewhere to encourage BR. Finally, lessons learned and the reaction of the financial services sector to strategies described in chapter 5 are highlighted, and key strategies and models to encourage BR are summarized.

The Kaministiquia River drains about 7,730 square kilometres and is the largest tributary flowing into Thunder Bay on Lake Superior. The river flows south from its source over two falls, both supporting hydroelectric stations, and the lower section is dredged for shipping purposes. This report describes and presents results of a detailed field survey of representative reaches of the river in which data were gathered on fish habitat and fish populations. Parameters recorded included cross-sectional width at habitat transects, water depth, substrate type, shoreline features, high water mark, in-stream habitat type, aquatic vegetation and terrain characteristics, water temperature, dissolved oxygen content, air temperature, sediment sizes in potential salmonid spawning sites, numbers of fish sampled in the fish inventory, and fish lengths and weights. Fish and habitat inventory results are discussed by reach and by species. The results are relevant to evaluation of the river's fishery potential and to help in determining possible impacts on the fish community resulting from rehabilitation of the lower portion of the river.

The method incorporates estimates of pollen-cone abundance as well as information on numbers of egg masses.

Ce document a pour but d'analyser l'offre et la demande du produit de tourisme itinérant offrant des villes dans les principaux marchés européens du Canada, et de présenter les perspectives de développement de l'expérience touristique urbaine dans des forfaits de tourisme itinérant. Ce rapport a été élaboré en tenant compte de l'objectif de Tourisme Canada qui est d'accroître les recettes du tourisme international du Canada. Ainsi, ce document s'adresse à tous les intervenants de l'industrie touristique canadienne et particulièrement aux organisateurs de voyages, aux grossistes, aux agents de tourisme réceptif et aux fournisseurs de produits touristiques individuels. Il vise à les sensibiliser aux besoins des touristes itinérants qui affectionnent les villes, au potentiel et aux lacunes des forfaits itinérants axés sur les villes, et aux retombées que ces forfaits pourraient apporter à l'économie du Canada.

Further studies on the assessment of marine radars for the detection of icebergs

ISBN 0-920783-34-1

Describes an investigation of the iceberg detection capability of shipborne marine radar, carried out during April 1985 in the northern Grand Banks area aboard the MV Polar Circle. During the data collection program, a high-resolution digital radar recording system was employed in conjunction with a specially installed Racal-Decca FI 2459 combined S- and X-band system which uses co-located and synchronized antennas at 15 metres height. Recording of raw radar video signals was accomplished for icebergs, sea ice, calibrated targets, sea clutter, and other targets of opportunity. The data set includes 38 measured icebergs of various sizes and types, as well as volumes of sea clutter and other target data collected under a range of environmental conditions (wave height up to 7 metres, wind speed up to 35 knots). Quantitative analysis results are presented of selected data points for validation of a radar model that can predict radar performance under a variety of operational and environmental conditions by modifying the input parameters.

Studies a wet-weather ground-based yarding operation to determine the impacts of skidders equipped with low ground pressure and conventional tires on soil physical and chemical properties and microclimate. To determine the effect of skid trails on survival and subsequent growth of planted seedlings, plantations were established on segments of skid trails in which equipment travel had been monitored and soil properties determined. Hemlock and fir seedlings were planted on the track and between track disturbance types, as well as on adjacent undisturbed soils of skid trail segments on which five levels of equipment travel had been determined for both treatments (low ground pressure and conventional tires). Results are presented for differences in mean height, diameter, and volume of seedlings after the seventh growing season according to treatment and disturbance type.

Before the Goods and Services Tax came into effect on January 1, 1991, the provinces vigorously opposed its introduction and the idea of harmonizing it with their own respective retail sales taxes. They accused the federal government of encroaching on the area of consumption taxes, which they considered to come within exclusively provincial jurisdiction. Moreover, it made sense for the provinces to avoid associating themselves with the federal government on the GST, given the political price that would have to be paid at election time for introducing such an unpopular tax. This document attempts to assess the likelihood of such harmonization in the near future.

Ice scour data base for the Beaufort Sea

By G. Gilbert and K. Pedersen. Ottawa : Environmental Studies Revolving Funds, 1987. xi, 133 p. : Ill., Maps, Bibl. (Environmental Studies Revolving Funds report / Environmental Studies Revolving Funds (Canada) ; no. 055) ISBN 0-920783-54-6
MICROLOG 97-06694 (3 fiche)

Describes a project to create a regional ice-scour data base for the Beaufort Sea, to process existing regional data of sufficient quality to be incorporated into the data base, to demonstrate the integrity of the data base, to illustrate its interpretive flexibility, and to test the feasibility of incorporating relative scour age and repetitive surveys for new scours into the data base. The data base at present contains computer-derived scour parameters for over 11,400 scours from echo sounder data and over 35,700 scours from side-scan sonar data. The nine separate data sets within this compilation were collected 1970-83 and represent some 5,000 kilometres of regional survey data from principal petroleum operators in the Beaufort Sea. Three types of interpretive analyses were computed and are graphically illustrated to demonstrate the interpretive capabilities of the data base: the first using the total echo sounder data base and producing a scour-depth distribution for the whole Beaufort Sea; the second showing the inter-relationship for two scour parameters (depth versus width); and the third illustrating the correlation between various scour parameters and an environmental parameter (water depth).

The field program proposed in this report is intended to collect data that would be required to determine the optimum system or systems, configuration, and operating procedures for detection of icebergs by airborne radar. The program's methodology (systems to be evaluated, data collection and analysis), logistics, cost estimates, and project management structure are described. Appendices include information on side-looking airborne radar, the iceberg detection capability of synthetic aperture radar, airborne radars used for ice surveillance, the theoretical prediction of performance in airborne radar iceberg detection, the feasibility of discriminating between icebergs and ships using electronic support, and aircraft capabilities and costs.

Contains 1,135 citations to works about icebergs off the east coast of Canada and the west coast of Greenland, covering all waters from Baffin Bay south to the Grand Banks and out into the North Atlantic. Relevant works on the techniques used to study and alter iceberg behaviour throughout the polar regions are also included. The main section arranges entries by author, then by title. There are four indexes: subject, geographic, titles, and names of serials or other larger work in which a document is found. All citations are annotated. Most citations have location codes indicating where the document can be obtained via inter-library loan.

IceNav shipboard radar integration, phase II

Prepared for Safety and Security, Transportation Development Centre, Transport Canada ; by C. Marton, D.J. Lapp, R. Wood. Ottawa : Canarctic Shipping Company Ltd., 1996. xiv, 154 p. : Ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-06802 (2 fiche)

Describes the second phase of a project that added functionality to a system integrating marine radar with an ice navigation system called IceNav. The enhancements included providing a basic data communication network link between IceNav and the modular radar interface unit, enabling marine radar data to be passed electronically and dynamically from the marine radar to IceNav, and implementing a basic set of marine radar control functions in IceNav. Three field trials are described in which the operability and robustness of the improved system were tested and feedback from operators was obtained. The appendix includes documentation of the operational and functional requirements of the IceNav/radar system, a revised detailed software design document, a list of on-line help files available on the IceNav system, and a copy of a IceNav/radar system user survey questionnaire.

Identification and prediction of interaction between the fisheries and the oil and gas industry off the east coast of Canada

By Michael Gardner. Ottawa : Environmental Studies Revolving Funds, 1985. vi, 77 p. : Ill., Maps (Environmental Studies Revolving Funds report / Environmental Studies Revolving Funds (Canada) ; no. 002) Cover title: Interaction between the fisheries and the oil and gas industry off the east coast of Canada. ISBN 0-920783-01-5

Oil and gas industry operations on Canada's east coast take place in waters that have been fished for centuries. The potential for conflict between the fishing industry and the oil/gas industry on the Scotian Shelf and Grand Banks takes three forms: competition for ocean space, interference with vessel operations, and damage to bottom-founded structures. This report sets out a procedure for identifying and predicting operational interaction between the industries. It involves compiling data on the location and timing of activities planned by both industries and depicting that activity on base maps. The maps are intended for both industrial and government use as an aid in planning offshore operations and in resolving potential conflicts. Sample maps based on 1982 data are included.

The Impact of exchange rate changes on the Canadian forest products sector

By Don G. Roberts. Ottawa : Forestry Canada, Economics Branch, 1988. vi, 69 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Canadian Forest Service. Economic Studies Division ; 2)
MICROLOG 97-06254 (1 fiche)

Exchange rate changes can have a significant impact on the profitability and competitiveness of Canadian producers of forest products, especially in the softwood lumber, newsprint, and pulp sectors. Two of the most important exchange rate variables determining the international competitiveness of Canada's forest sector are the US/Canadian dollar exchange rate and the Swedish Krona/Canadian dollar exchange rate. This paper presents indices of international competitiveness for Canadian softwood lumber, newsprint, and pulp producers and examines their sensitivity to changes in the above two exchange rates; and estimates the short-term impact of a 10% appreciation of the Canadian dollar against the US dollar on production and employment in Canada's softwood lumber, newsprint, pulp, and other papers industries.

Describes a study of soil conditions, the growth of lodgepole pine and Douglas-fir seedlings, and development of other vegetation in order to gauge the effect of skidroads on site productivity of a coarse glacioluvial soil in south-central British Columbia. Investigators assessed soil density, penetrability, texture, and chemistry before planting seedlings and analyzed seedling foliage nutrients and root development for five growing seasons after planting. To reduce the potential for erosion, cross-contour skidroads were operationally seeded with a mixture of grasses and legumes. Growth of seedlings on the skidroad surfaces is compared with that on adjacent undisturbed soil, and factors affecting observed differences are discussed.

Describes studies to determine levels and impacts of soil disturbance caused during root disease control by stump removal at a cutover on southern Vancouver Island. Studies were initiated immediately prior to the control operation and to the establishment of a Douglas-fir plantation. Soil surface condition was assessed on the stumped area and soil disturbance was measured at 699 planting spots. Vegetation development was assessed at 10% of the spots. Results presented include soil density and penetrability, fir seedling survival rates by category of soil disturbance, seedling growth after up to ten growing seasons, and vegetation cover and composition by category of disturbance.

The forest products sector is a major component of the Canadian economy. In 1990, industries in the Canadian forest products sector had shipments totalling $38.7 billion and exports of $22 billion. That same year, they contributed $19 billion to Canada's trade balance. The forest products sector is of crucial economic importance to all regions of the country. Over 350 single-industry communities depend on it for their economic well-being. It provides direct employment for almost 300 000 people, including approximately 45 000 people in logging activities. This Industry Profile is one of a series of papers in which Industry, Science and Technology Canada assesses, in a summary form, the current competitiveness of Canada's industrial sectors, taking into account technological, human resource and other critical factors.

The wholesale trade industry consists of two types of firms. First, there are the wholesale merchants, who are primarily engaged in buying merchandise for resale to retailers; industrial, commercial, institutional, farm or professional business users; trade contractors; and other wholesalers. Second, there are firms that act as agents and brokers in buying or selling merchandise on a commission basis. Wholesalers are a key link between manufacturers and the marketplace. ### Initial observations on what results are expected from a reformed health system : companion document

Provincial Health Council of Alberta. Edmonton : The Council, 1997. 27 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-06321 (1 fiche)

The Provincial Health Council of Alberta has been given the task of monitoring the province's health system as a whole. This document begins with an outline of the Council's understanding of health reform and of the current health system. It then discusses how the framework used to describe the health system can affect expected results, and how the principles of a reformed health system can aid in understanding those results. Finally, it presents the Council's initial observations on what results are to be expected from a reformed health system in the areas of improved health, improved services, and reduced costs.

Inventory results are presented and local seabed conditions, ocean currents, and theoretical upslope/downslope scour models are described and discussed. In the inventory, up to six different types of measurement were made on each iceberg scour (or scour track interpreted from the radar data): orientation, length, shape, depth, bathymetric range, and change in width.

Investing in transportation, a transportation strategy for Saskatchewan people

Regina : Saskatchewan Highways & Transportation, 1997. 34 p. : Ill.
MICROLOG 97-06474 (1 fiche)

Begins with an overview of the importance of transportation to the Saskatchewan economy, given the province's reliance on exports and its distance from port facilities. This is followed by a review of the province's existing transportation network (road, rail, air) and the global, national, and provincial challenges to the transportation system. Concludes with a vision for a transportation system for the next century and a multi-year action plan to move the province toward a sustainable transportation system that supports economic and social growth. Elements of this system include a competitive rail sector, improved logistics practices, enhanced north/south links, improved trucking efficiency, investment in infrastructure and human resources, area transportation planning, a branch line abandonment strategy, and transportation partnerships.

Reviews solubility and stability data for ferric iron oxides and aqueous ferrous and ferric species. Selected values are used to calculate potential-pH diagrams for the iron system at temperatures of 25 and 100 degrees C, chloride activities of 0.01 and 1 mole/kilogram, total carbonate activity of 0.001 mole/kilogram, and ferric iron oxide/oxyhydroxide solubility products of up to 10 to the -42 power. The temperatures and anion concentrations bracket the range of conditions expected in a Canadian underground nuclear fuel waste disposal vault. The solubility products represent a conservative upper limit, a most probable value, and a minimum credible value for the iron oxides likely to be important in controlling redox conditions in a disposal vault. The research presented is intended to help resolve the question whether a persistent, metastable form of ferric oxide will be able to mediate the oxidative dissolution of uranium oxide in the nuclear fuel.

Summarizes results of laboratory experiments carried out on a model of an oil-skimming bow (OSB), a device designed to recover oil from waters obstructed by broken ice. The OSB system could be retrofitted to most ice-reinforced ships or icebreakers servicing the offshore oil industry in a particular area, enabling them to assist in the recovery of oil after a major oil spill. A series of 69 tests was conducted to evaluate the efficiency of the OSB model at an environmental ice tank 30 metres long, with an ice sheet 15 centimetres thick formed on the water and subsequently broken. The tests involved four simulated broken ice fields of zero to 70% ice concentrations; oils of two different viscosities; two different thicknesses of oil slicks; and model towing velocities of 8 to 30 centimetres per second. Optimum conditions for maximum oil recovery efficiency are identified.

This publication reviews literature on Aboriginal homelessness, supplemented by literature on Aboriginal socio-economic conditions, urban Aboriginals and street youth, Aboriginal health issues, discrimination against minorities in the housing market, and Aboriginal skid row lifestyle. After a profile of Aboriginal populations in Canada, discussion of the literature is organized under the following subject areas: definitions of homelessness, risk factors in Aboriginal homelessness, characteristics of the Aboriginal homeless, homelessness in rural Aboriginal communities, and addressing Aboriginal homelessness. The final section summarizes expert opinions from those who are working with homeless Aboriginals across Canada regarding the most pressing issues currently affecting those people.

Describes the establishment of, and preliminary findings, from, a microseismic monitoring network set up to assess the rate of activity of local seismic events in the vicinity of the Pickering and Darlington nuclear power plants in Ontario. An extensive background noise survey was first carried out, involving measuring and comparing the amplitude response of ambient vibration caused by natural phenomena such as water flow and human activity such as quarrying at 25 test sites. Subsequently, a five-station seismic network with a 30-kilometre aperture was selected between the two power plants on the south and Lake Scugog to the north. The detection threshold obtained for two of the stations allows recording of local events of magnitude 0 to 2, a range usually not detected by regional seismic networks. Analysis of several thousand signals resulted in identification of about 120 local events attributable to the natural release of crustal stresses.

Long-range prediction of Grand Banks iceberg season severity : a statistical approach.

This study applies two complementary statistical methods to develop long-range prediction models for the occurrence of icebergs on the Grand Banks. The annual flux of icebergs across 48 degrees north latitude is predicted on the basis of correlations between the historical (1951-84) iceberg flux and selected atmospheric pressure and temperature fields. First, a statistical correlation approach isolates geographic locations from a northern hemispheric grid where particular time averages of mean sea-level pressure anomaly and geopotential height anomaly are correlated with the iceberg severity index. Monte Carlo tests are then imposed to ensure the statistical significance of selected predictors, which are input into a multiple regression equation to forecast iceberg severity. Secondly, the method of empirical orthogonal function (EOF) analysis is applied to four atmospheric pressure and temperature fields, and correlations are sought between dominant EOF modes and the iceberg severity index. Multiple regression models are then constructed from sets of predictors which correlate with the ice index. A secondary investigation considers the role of pack ice in the Davis Strait, Baffin Bay, and Labrador Sea region in influencing the occurrence of icebergs on the Grand Banks.

The problem of a changing climate is not just about climate or energy consumption or emissions of greenhouse gases. The problem is also about the effects such a change will have on the earth's ecosystems, resources and human settlements, and about the need to reduce or avoid these effects. The consequences are going to be unique to each region and country, so regional stakeholders should have a greater role in designing national and international strategies to respond to climate change. The model developed for the Mackenzie Basin Impact Study of scientist-stakeholder collaboration may be one way of reaching this goal.

The main objective of this study was to improve handling capabilities for small ice masses, thereby enabling offshore operators working in ice-infested waters to reduce ice related downtime. The first part of the study examines ice mass management techniques which have been either proposed or actually used. These techniques include the use of tow ropes and nets, prop washing, bow pushing, deflection, and water cannons. The findings of this examination are then discussed in the context of management of small ice masses (growlers, bergy bits, small icebergs). To develop design criteria for an ice handling system, representatives from environmental, offshore industry, and shipping sectors were consulted regarding the size of ice masses to be handled, the environmental conditions under which handling could occur, and desired specifications for the proposed system. Finally, construction details and descriptions are presented for three systems using nets and one using water cannons. Preliminary cost estimates are also provided.

Qu'il s'agisse d'un établissement autochtone dans l'Amazonie ou d'un village rural d'Angleterre, ces questions seraient les mêmes. Au début de chaque chapitre, on trouvera un résumé des principales questions qui y sont abordées et, à la fin, une liste d'options et d'actions possibles. Plus précisément, les points abordés sont les suivants : quelles sont les personnes qui visitent les communautés; que faut-il-on des connaissances et des ressources traditionnelles; qui profite des ressources traditionnelles; la communauté sera-t-elle informée; les communautés ont-elles le droit d'accepter ou de refuser la commercialisation; comment une communauté peut-elle tenter des poursuites; qu'appelle-t-on contrats et conventions; les droits de propriété intellectuelle sont-ils utiles; les communautés peuvent-elles développer leur propre système pour protéger leurs droits sur les ressources traditionnelles; les accords internationaux juridiquement contraignants sont-ils utiles; comment les communautés peuvent-elles utiliser les lois douces et les accords internationaux non contraignants; les instruments non gouvernementaux, non juridiques sont-ils utiles; pourquoi les fonds et les orientations devant régir le financement sont-ils importants; quelles stratégies et solutions inédites a-t-on trouvées à ce jour; et, protection, indemnisation et développement des communautés.

The menu-cost models of price adjustment developed by Ball and Mankiw (1994, 1995) predict that short-run movements in inflation should be positively related to the skewness and the variance of the distribution of disaggregated relative-price shocks in each period. This paper tests those predictions on Canadian data using the distribution of changes in disaggregated producer prices to measure the skewness and standard deviation of relative-price shocks. It first reviews economic theory underlying the postulated relationship between inflation and the skewness and variance of the distribution of relative-price changes. Data used to construct the distribution of relative-price shocks are described along with the different measures of skewness. The next two sections report empirical evidence on the explanatory power of the skewness and variance of the distribution of relative-price shocks, including evidence from partial correlations based on annual data and evidence from standard price Phillips curves estimated on quarterly data. The conclusion suggests future areas of future research on inflation.

Mid-range accommodation in Canada : a status report

Ottawa : Industry Canada, Tourism Canada, Canada Directorate, 1994. 48 p. : ill., Bibl. French ed. (Les Établissements hôteliers de classe...) : 97-06746/1. MICROLOG 97-06745 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this report is to provide information on the mid-range accommodation segment in Canada with a view to identifying opportunities for increasing its international competitiveness. The mid-range segment, representing properties with room rates in the 50-75 dollar range in most urban centres, is the largest accommodation segment, with a third of all properties in Canada's major urban centres. Information was compiled from interviews with companies representing some 646 properties and 77,230 rooms across the country. Key findings are presented first, including reasons for economic problems, competitive position, and service standards. Seven areas for product development and opportunities for product/market matches are identified.

tified. Detailed findings are then presented, including occupancy rates, revenue sources, number of rooms, and advertised room rates. Includes glossary.

There is a concern that buried sumps containing salt water drilling fluids (for disposal of waste drilling fluids necessary to penetrate the Saline River salt member in the northern interior plains) in the Northwest Territories may not remain sufficiently frozen to prevent contamination of the surrounding environment, due to freezing point depression by the salt and disturbance of the permafrost. This report describes a study carried out to address that question, initiated in September 1985 to monitor a buried salty sump located at the Tweed Lake M-47 well site. Fixed frequency electromagnetic surveys were employed to locate areas of high conductivity which indicated areas of potential salt seepage and thawed sump fluids. Results of possible salt plume detection are presented.

More money than is good for us : why the Bank of Canada should tighten monetary policy

Recent growth in the M1 monetary aggregate, a measure of cash and chequing accounts in chartered banks, has raised concerns that there is too much money circulating in the Canadian economy and that this is not compatible with maintenance of low inflation. This paper discusses whether the growth in money is over-stimulative and inflationary, along with the implications for Canadian monetary policy. Reasons for rejecting a dramatic tightening of monetary policy are noted, and a new money measure M1X (M1 plus certain accounts difficult to distinguish from demand deposits) is examined to determine the role of structural changes in M1 growth. Finally, the need for rises in short term interest rates is assessed.

Begins with a literature review and a survey of existing computer models related to an investigation of ice mass motions in the vicinity of an offshore structure. A numerical model is then developed, based on superposing the wave-induced oscillatory motion obtained by linear wave diffraction theory on the drift motions computed through a time-stepping procedure. The method pertains to two neighbouring bodies of arbitrary three-dimensional shape, one fixed and the other freely floating with six degrees of freedom. Hydrodynamic interaction effects between the two bodies are included in the procedure and viscous damping is taken into account. A limited parametric and sensitivity analysis was carried out to demonstrate the model's capabilities. Three different ice masses are modelled and results are presented showing ice mass trajectory, variations of ice mass velocity, and selected hydrodynamic coefficients for each test.

Mountain pine beetle, Dendroctonus ponderosae, is the most destructive insect pest of mature pines in western North America. Its impact in British Columbia includes annual losses averaging 7.8 million mature pine trees annually over the past 34 years. This report begins with an overview of survey methods carried out to detect and monitor developing and expanding beetle infestations and populations. It then details the history of mountain pine beetle infestations in each forest region of British Columbia, giving estimates of numbers of trees killed and hectares affected. A summary table lists losses by year for each Timber Supply Area of the province and notes major areas of infestation.

Describes a field monitoring program conducted at two locations offshore of North Head on Richards Island in the Beaufort Sea to measure changes in pore water pressure and near-bed suspended sediment concentrations in response to storm-generated waves and near-bottom currents. The program was carried out in August-September 1986, when pack ice remained 100-200 kilometres offshore and two reasonably energetic storms with significant wave heights up to 2.5 metres were monitored in shallow water. Basic findings from the new data are presented. The data ultimately are to be used to examine the liquefaction potential of the surficial soils, expected sediment transport rates, and the mechanics of wave energy attenuation.

Specifically, the project attempted to: determine whether checking for proper fill by mass of natural gas dispensed into a vehicle cylinder is an acceptable method; determine whether the method of test in the draft standard provides sufficient detail to run the overfill protection tests with a satisfactory degree of repeatability; ascertain the ability of current natural gas vehicle dispensers to provide a proper fill without over-pressurization of the vehicle cylinders; and recommend changes required to the draft standard.

The main purpose of this study is to determine the key factors that enhance or inhibit the ability of oil and gas companies operating in northern Canada to train and employ northern residents. The study focuses on improvements that industry could make, not only in its employment and training initiatives but also in its interaction with government agencies in the delivery and monitoring of programs. The study begins with background on the history of oil and gas activities in the north, the social and governmental context in the north, fundamental factors underlying northern employment and training efforts in the oil and gas industry, and labour supply and demand in the north. Barriers to northern employment are then discussed, including education levels, community size and remoteness, and cultural differences. This is followed by discussion of programs to alleviate those barriers, focusing on issues surrounding programs that relate directly to recruitment and hiring for entry-level positions. Major outstanding issues affecting employment and training of northerners are assessed, including the recruiting/hiring process, pre-employment and post-hire training, compliance, and monitoring. Finally, recommendations are made to improve the employment and training process.

Mankind utilizes energy in many forms and from a variety of sources. Canada is one of a growing number of countries which have chosen to embrace nuclear-electric generation as a component of their energy systems. This paper discusses the issue of safety in complex energy systems and provides brief accounts of some of the most serious reactor accidents which have occurred to date.

This report documents a computer simulation program that depicts the behaviour and distribution of oil spilled in or under sea ice. The program combines mathematical models developed in previous studies to describe the motion of oil in or under the ice surface. By inputting or estimating such key parameters as oil type, spill duration, flow rate under ice, current speeds and direction, under-ice roughness, shoreline, and ice boundaries, a time series of plots are generated showing the distribution of the spilled oil. The simulation plots the position of the oil with respect to a particular ice sheet, but it does not include the subsequent movement of oil-contaminated ice. The effect of oil in broken pack and brash ice can be simulated by varying the under-ice roughness. Documentation of the model is provided to enable data systems professionals to mount and run the program. Source code listings of the FORTRAN mainline program and two sub-routines are included.

In case of an oil spill in Arctic waters during spring break-up, oil may appear in the leads between ice floes. Development of suitable mitigation tools requires knowledge of where and how the oil will move. This paper describes the experimental apparatus and the data collected during four tests conducted to study the motion of oil in leads on a near field-size scale. In the experiments, closure rate of the leads was varied over the 0-12 centimetre/second range and the amount of oil (Adgo, a relatively heavy crude and a typical Arctic oil) that remained on the surface within the closed lead and under the water was measured as a function of closure rate. Results presented give a clearer understanding of how oil will react when natural leads close and improve the capability to handle oil in such situations.

An Operational iceberg trajectory forecasting model for the Grand Banks of Newfoundland

MICROLOG 97-06688 (2 fiche)

This paper takes a statistical approach toward iceberg forecasting, based on extensive analysis of past iceberg behaviour in the region of concern, the Grand Banks. The first step in the analysis consisted of determining the iceberg response to wind. Wind-driven and tidal components of the motion were subtracted from observed iceberg velocities to obtain the residual drift. Analysis of residual iceberg velocities on the Grand Banks allowed determination of the mean pattern as well as the amount of variability in iceberg motion over the study area. An autocorrelation analysis of the variable part of the residual iceberg motion was carried out to show the consistency of the drift over time. Based on the results, an operational forecast model is presented, with inputs including observed and forecast winds as well as the most recent iceberg positions. The model was verified by comparison of predicted and observed iceberg trajectories for 1984 and 1985. The model has been implemented on a microcomputer using PASCAL.

Only packages offering at least one night and one tourism activity in one or more of five selected cities (Calgary, Halifax, Ottawa, Quebec, Victoria) are considered. For each of the three markets, the assessment of demand profiles both the tourists who have visited and who would like to visit Canada, and provides social and demographic characteristics of tourists in markets segmented by product and by package travel orientation. The assessment of supply includes such information as supply of packages by season, accommodation, package prices, gateways to Canada, activities included in packages, and highlights of a special survey of tour operators.

Performance measures from track geometry cars : feasibility of wheel load and defect prediction

By T.W. Moynihan and G.W. English ; prepared for Transportation Development Centre, Safety and Security, Transport Canada. Kingston, ON : Transys Research Ltd., 1997. xviii, 88 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-06796 (2 fiche)

A track geometry car or track evaluation vehicle is the principle means used by major railways to measure track geometric quality. The standard deviation of geometry deviations, an index used by many railways as a surrogate for quality, has limitations as a performance measure. The goal of the research reported in this document is to assess the feasibility of developing a performance-based measure of track quality that can be calculated on board a track evaluation car in real time. The envisioned quality index would reflect wheel forces of several distinct cars of interest calculated from the measured track geometry. The focus of the research reported is to develop and validate a model to predict vertical wheel loads from measured track geometry. Data were collected from two instrumented wheel sets on the lead truck of a loaded 100-ton coal car and the track geometry was measured from a coupled track evaluation car. Two frequency domain car models were developed to predict wheel forces for a measured segment of track. A preliminary attempt was also made at predicting track defects and correlating the wheel load prediction with the defect predictor.

Records results of a petrographic and geochemical investigation of 41 shale core samples from the Beaufort-Mackenzie Basin, carried out in conjunction with other investigations to evaluate controls on porosity and permeability trends within hydrocarbon-bearing zones of the Basin. The data presented will be used to better calibrate wireline data that may then be used in hydrocarbon exploration and exploitation strategies. Extensive petrographic documentation is presented of Beaufort-Mackenzie shale fabrics, along with geochemical data including bulk, mineralogical, and organic matter compositions.

Describes a study whose objectives were: to review and evaluate procedures for long-range predictions of iceberg season severity in Newfoundland waters; to develop an optimum approach for iceberg severity prediction; and to recommend future research directions regarding improvements to iceberg severity prediction capabilities. The study approach focused on examination of both a coarsened version of the historical iceberg severity record and the best available inter-annual time series data on a selected set of physical parameters that were expected to be closely related to the physical mechanisms which control iceberg severity. Several useful parameters were found and the results of predicted and recorded severities are compared in terms of individual predictor statistics. Recommendations are provided with regard to obtaining improved understanding of interrelationships among sea-ice extent, sea-ice velocity, iceberg numbers, and rates of iceberg deterioration.

The Centralized Education Data, Administration & Reporting (CEDAR) system is a computerized database containing detailed information on teachers, classes, student enrolment, school instruction time, withdrawals, high school completions, and other descriptive information on Nova Scotia schools. CEDAR is used to support decisions regarding operations and changes in the province's education system and also to support the teacher certification process. This report presents an evaluation for the redesign of CEDAR as well as a review of the services provided by the Dept. of Education & Culture's Statistics & Data Entry Section. Functions of CEDAR are examined including its role in information collection, statistical report production, decision support, responses to inquiries, and external access. Strengths and weaknesses are identified, and several departmental education and technology initiatives associated with CEDAR are outlined along with an assessment of their relation to, and impact on, the CEDAR system. Finally, the report makes recommendations for CEDAR system redesign, outlines the benefits of redesign, and proposes an implementation plan for renewal.

The purpose of this study is to provide practical and strategic marketing information on the potential Australian long-haul pleasure travel market to Canada and the United States. The Australian market was assessed from three perspectives: the consumer or long-haul traveller; the travel trade in Australia; and the tour products offered in Australia for travel to North America. The study report begins with an overview of the Australian long-haul pleasure travel market, including trip characteristics and profiles of Australians planning to travel. It then examines the long-haul pleasure travel market potential, discussing such matters as interest in visiting Canada and the US, impressions of tourism attributes, and marketing strengths and weaknesses. This is followed by discussion of popular destinations and important or unique activities that help to identify marketable segments for targeted promotional efforts; a section on communicating to the Australian market, including information on trip planning behaviour and media habits of Australian travellers; and a review of Australian use of package travel. A copy of a travel consumer questionnaire is appended.

Alberta Energy & Utilities Board. Calgary, AB : The Board, 1997. 34 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 97-06224 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

Regulation of solution gas flaring, traditionally undertaken for reasons of resource conservation, has become an increasingly important issue in Alberta due to environmental and health concerns. This publication describes and reports findings from a review of Alberta policies regarding solution gas flaring, or the burning off of gases dissolved in petroleum being produced at oil fields. The review included consultations with public and industry groups in areas of active solution gas flaring activity. Issues discussed include site-specific and regional environmental impacts, gas resource conservation, global environmental impacts, communication among industry, government, and the public, and regulatory efficiency. Existing policies regarding solution gas flaring are examined and recommendations for change are made where warranted. The appendix includes a brief economic analysis of the costs of further solution gas conservation in Alberta.

Cette publication est la dernière d'une série de trois, portant sur des modèles de prévention, et publiées par le Conseil national de prévention du crime. Le Conseil a pour but de traduire dans des stratégies pratiques et réalisables son engagement à l'égard de la prévention du crime au moyen du développement social. Les modèles portent sur les causes sous-jacentes de la criminalité et four-nissent des suggestions pour faire correspondre les programmes et les services aux besoins des jeunes aux différentes étapes de leur développement. La publication s'adresse à un vaste public, dont les jeunes, qui est prêt à relever un défi de taille : promouvoir la santé dans les familles et chez les enfants, rehausser la sécurité dans les écoles et les collectivités et prévenir la victimisation et la criminalité chez les jeunes. Il vise à introduire l'idée du développement communautaire. On y souligne bon nombre des questions clés que les gouvernements, les parents, les jeunes, les écoles et les collectivités devront examiner dans le cadre de leur collaboration en vue d'appuyer la création de milieux propices au développement et à l'esprit communautaire, et de promouvoir le bien-être chez les jeunes.

Ce document présente la deuxième d'une série de trois brochures publiées par le Conseil national de prévention du crime. L'objectif de la série est de présenter un modèle de prévention du crime et de la victimisation parmi les jeunes, fondé sur une approche de développement social et suggérant un ensemble d'initiatives de prévention s'appliquant aux divers stades du développement des jeunes. Ce document met en lumière les expériences cruciales, que vivent les six à douze ans, qui pourraient les entraîner dans la criminalité au cours de leur jeunesse et de leur âge adulte. Bien qu'il souligne de façon générale les interventions possibles, il ne tente pas de décrire les méthodes idéales d'exécution ou de mise en œuvre du programme. This is the third of a series of crime prevention models that address the underlying causes of crime and provide suggestions for matching programs and services to the needs of young people at different stages of development. This third publication focuses on youths aged 12-18 and highlights many of the key issues that governments, parents, youth, schools, and communities will need to consider as they work together to support the development of nurturing environments and community spirit, and to promote well-being in young people. It begins with background to the model, including discussion of the seriousness of the youth crime problem in Canada and explanation of the social settings of the model. The model takes a holistic approach and provides general goals, linkages, and means of crime prevention in five social settings: society, family, school, peer groups, and the community. The appendix includes an outline of the links among the prevention models for pre-natal to age 6, age 6-12, and age 12-18 stages of development.

The history behind this topic began in June 1996, when the members of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Persons with Disabilities were a committee of Parliament in search of a subject of study. Like many Canadians, we were curious about the impact of technologies on the broader elements of human existence. What is the impact of new technologies on human rights? This document examines where do we draw the line regarding privacy. Topics covered are: rights, values and attitudes; the patchwork of privacy protection; and, core privacy principles.

Au milieu des années 1990, la ville de Calgary traitait environ 23 000 permis pour des maisons individuelles et bifamiliales neuves. Cinq demandes de permis et calculs de droit distincts étaient nécessaires pour chaque logement, ce qui faisait perdre beaucoup de temps à toutes les personnes concernées. Dans le but de rationaliser les méthodes et de réduire les coûts, la Building Regulations Division de Calgary, qui est chargée de la délivrance des permis, a proposé d'élaborer un processus de demande de permis unique. Ce document présente les résultats d'une étude de cas sur le processus de demande de permis unique.

Ottawa : Industrie, sciences et technologie Canada, 1993. 14, 12 p. : ill. Bilingue (Industry profile...space).

Le début des activités spatiales du Canada remonte aux années 1930, lorsque les scientifiques canadiens ont commencé à étudier la haute atmosphère à l'aide d'instruments au sol. À la suite de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, le Canada a construit et exploité des fusées et des ballons pour élargir le champ de ses observations atmosphériques. L'ouverture d'un centre de recherche à Churchill au Manitoba et la mise au point de la série de fusées Black Brant par la société Bristol Aerospace de Winnipeg ont permis au Canada de participer aux activités de l'Année géophysique internationale de 1957-1958. Le profil présenté dans ce document fait partie d'une série de documents grâce auxquels Industrie, Sciences et Technologie Canada procède à l'évaluation sommaire de la position concurrentielle des secteurs industriels canadiens, en tenant compte de la technologie, des ressources humaines et de divers autres facteurs critiques.

Le Ministère a préparé ce profil en classant les données de Statistique Canada selon le secteur dans lequel le matériel est utilisé ou le service fourni. Le secteur forestier est l'une des principales composantes de l'économie canadienne. En 1990, les expéditions du secteur forestier canadien se chiffraient à 38,7 milliards de dollars, et les exportations, à 22 milliards. La même année, ce secteur a apporté une contribution de 19 milliards à la balance commerciale du Canada. Le secteur forestier est d'une importance fondamentale pour l'économie de toutes les régions du pays. La situation économique de plus de 350 collectivités est entièrement tributaire de cette industrie, qui assure de l'emploi direct à près de 300 000 personnes, dont 45 000 d'entre elles travaillent en exploitation forestière. This report proposes a method for the calculation of the frequency spectrum of the structural response of a ship based on the use of regular wave hull pressure loads and rigid-body accelerations provided by PRECAL (a linear frequency domain hydrodynamics code based on three dimensional potential flow) and a top-down quasi-static structural analysis procedure to be implemented in the suite of VAST finite element codes. The method involves a global coarse finite element model of the entire ship and a local detailed finite element model of the area of interest. The global model is used to calculate global displacements which are subsequently used in the local analysis. Method is expected to considerably improve computational efficiency compared to classical random response methods now employed.

It begins with a review of historical, current, and future utilization trends for psyllium, its demand by food processors and the pharmaceutical industry, and alternative fibre sources to psyllium. It then reviews the competitive advantages and disadvantages of psyllium production in Saskatchewan, clinical and pharmaceutical confirmation of the effectiveness of psyllium, and the possible market niche for Saskatchewan psyllium.

The purpose of this report is to provide the basis and background information to support the recommended criteria (in volume II) for the evaluation of on-site nuclear power plant emergency plans. Two types of criteria have been developed: essential criteria and enhancement criteria (not necessary for effective response but adding value to emergency response effectiveness). The report identifies the source of the requirement for each of the essential criteria and compares the criteria with important emergency planning standards. It also describes the process by which the criteria document has been verified for accuracy and completeness, and validated for usability.

The objective of this report is to provide criteria for assessment of nuclear power plant on-site emergency plans. These criteria will allow identification of any areas in a plant's response capability that require management attention and upgrading. The criteria relate on-site actions and their integration with control room activities and the roles of off-site responsible organizations. The recommended criteria provide information on what is required, and not on how to accomplish the requirements. The criteria relate to such matters as emergency preparedness organization, personnel selection and qualification, emergency response training, emergency equipment and facilities, accident assessment, protection of plant personnel, emergency public information, exercises and drills, and plan documentation.

Productivity of perennial forage stands in Saskatchewan tends to decline over time due to various factors. Traditional forage rejuvenation methods involving breaking and reseeding can result in temporary loss of habitat and put the soil resource at risk. Less costly, reduced-input rejuvenation methods designed to work with the plant communities already present are attractive alternatives. This guide provides information on these alternatives, beginning with a description of the information required for determining which alternative is appropriate. Rejuvenation methods described include controlled grazing, burning, mowing, mechanical soil disturbance, fertilization, application of herbicides, sod seeding, and overseeding of legumes. The final section includes a simplified cost benefit analysis of treatment options for a smooth bromegrass stand used for hay.

Les relations fédérales-provinciales influent sur la plupart des grandes activités du gouvernement au Canada et elles sont en évolution quasi constante. Ces changements trouvent principalement leur source dans l'élection de nouveaux gouvernements qui ont des priorités politiques nouvelles et une conception neuve du fédéralisme, dans l'environnement social et politique, qui suscite constamment de nouveaux problèmes et de nouvelles questions, et dans l'expérience de relations intergouvernementales de plus en plus complexes, qui requiert des ajustements sur le plan des politiques et des institutions. Dans ce bulletin, on fait état des événements survenus sur la scène fédérale-provinciale sous l'angle des enjeux et des tendances. On vise ainsi à prévoir les orientations probables des relations fédérales-provinciales et des institutions.

The Ontario law governing the administration of the estates of deceased persons is often difficult, uncertain, and obscure, and needs rationalization and modernization. Following an introduction, this report examines the office of personal representative (executors and estate administrators) in some detail, considering such matters as their appointment, powers, duties, liability, and compensation. It then considers how beneficiaries are identified, in particular, the rules governing proof of survivorship, proof of death, and unascertained beneficiaries. Substantive and procedural issues dealing with creditors and other claimants of the estate are examined, and the vesting in estate trustees of both personal and real property is discussed along with their power of sale in relation to that property. The final chapter addresses several discrete issues relating to the role of the Ontario Court, General Division, in estates administration. Recommendations for reform of the law are presented throughout.

Residential retrofit potential in Canada

By Ken Cooper, Christopher Mattock and David Rousseau. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Research Division, 1996. vi, 99 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-06507 (2 fiche)

Describes a research project undertaken to determine the impacts of various levels of energy-related retrofits on the production of carbon dioxide by single detached housing stock in Canada. Several retrofit scenarios are proposed and applied to 765 actual house data files using a spreadsheet program developed to perform thermal simulations of base and upgraded houses, calculate amounts of pollutant emissions, perform retrofit costing, and calculate embodied energy and pollutants. Whole-house retrofits were performed including all portions of the envelope, mechanical systems, appliances, and operation. An analysis was carried out to ensure that the retrofit measures performed would not adversely affect indoor environment and durability. The feasibility of achieving a 50% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions from existing Canadian housing through energy-related retrofits is also assessed.

Documents work completed in the development and validation of a ship performance analysis system based on system identification (SYID). The purpose of the system is to enable accurate determination of a ship's hydrodynamic performance coefficients from simple non-dedicated trials. Hydrodynamic coefficients identified include resistance coefficient (in open water and in ice), thrust deduction fraction, and wake fraction. Phase 4 of the project, reported in this document further refined the SYID analysis methodology and developed a data acquisition and analysis system for use in non-dedicated trials. Results are presented from two trials completed aboard a coast guard vessel in which a data acquisition system was installed and acceleration data were collected and analyzed.

Phosphorus is frequently the most limiting nutrient in alfalfa production in western Canada. Provide is a microbial seed inoculant whose active ingredient consists of spores of a naturally occurring soil fungus, Penicillium bilaii, which can solubilize precipitated and bound phosphorus into soil solution for uptake by plants. This report describes a field study undertaken to determine the yield and phosphorus uptake response of alfalfa to inoculation with Provide at varying rates of phosphorus fertilizer across a range of soil and environmental conditions, and to calculate the phosphorus credit (or phosphorus fertilizer replacement value) of this inoculant. The study consisted of small- and large-plot experiments, the latter established to better represent management practices and field conditions of al-

La Ville de Drummondville comme de nombreuses autres agglomérations urbaines du Québec, se dépeuple tranquillement au profit de la périphérie. Pour mettre fin à cet exode, la Ville de Drummondville a adopté, en 1991, un programme de revitalisation du centre-ville comportant une série de mesures à court terme. Il prévoit, entre autres, la création des "quartiers du Centre", quartiers résidentiels au coeur de la ville destinés aux jeunes ménages qui sont traditionnellement attirés par la banlieue. Ces quartiers regrouperaient des habitations unifamiliales et multifamiliales de types localité, coopératif et copropriété.

The purpose of this paper is to examine the relationship between housing and family violence. In particular, it notes three relationships: the role of housing in providing protection of abused persons from further violence; the role of housing in family violence prevention; and the role of housing as a contributing factor to violent behaviour within the family. The first section provides an overview of the mandate of Canada's federal housing agency and its role with regard to family violence. The second section reviews current knowledge regarding the nature and level of family violence in Canada. The third section explores the relationship between housing and family violence and the fourth section notes some of the future policy and program directions suggested by interest groups.

Être sans abri, c'est ne pas avoir de toit au-dessus de la tête, mais c'est aussi beaucoup plus. L'absence de logis coupe l'individu du reste de la société, l'empêche de jouer un rôle dans la collectivité et lui nie toute vie privée et toute sécurité. Ce document se penche sur les sans-abri au Canada. Il aborde principalement la définition des sans-abri; le dénombrement des sans-abri; la composition de la population de sans-abri; la pénurie de logements abordables; les solutions au problème des sans-abri; et, les mesures parlementaires.

Describes a measurement program designed to monitor the behaviour of sea floor sediments on the Scotian Shelf under winter storm conditions. Four measurement sites were spaced along a transect line running seaward from Martinique Beach, Nova Scotia, on a bearing of approximately 156 degrees. One site was located on gravel in 30 metres water depth, and the other three were on sand in depths of 20 to 37 metres. The main measuring device used was a rod driven into the sea bottom onto which was placed a specially designed washer assembly to monitor changes in sea floor elevation with time. Other equipment included video and time lapse cameras, chain-type scour detectors, current meters, and a box corer. Results are presented regarding sea floor scour and accretion, bed form measurements, sediment grain size analyses, oceanographic conditions, and anomalous sea floor depressions.

Treating children, youth, and families in a holistic manner requires that human service providers work together and share information to meet the best interests of the people they serve. This publication has been developed to encourage and support Saskatchewan human service providers in sharing information among one another. It provides: guiding principles to follow when obtaining informed consent and sharing information; a review of recent legislative amendments and current practice to enable information sharing on a need-to-know basis; rules pertaining to disclosure of information for each human service sector; and a guide for human service providers in making a personal commitment to collaborate. The information in the guide does not apply to situations involving police investigation or child abuse.

By John R. Harper and Edward H. Owens. Ottawa : Environmental Studies Revolving Funds, 1985. iv, 50 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Environmental Studies Revolving Funds report / Environmental Studies Revolving Funds (Canada) ; no. 012) ISBN 0-900783-09-0 MICROLOG 97-06459 (1 fiche)

This report outlines procedures for conducting shoreline monitoring programs of opportunity for accidental oil spills. The procedures outlined apply to documentation of oil contamination levels only and do not address biological concerns. General methodology is presented for providing an observation and sampling program to estimate the extent and volume of oil stranded in the shore zone. Program objectives may range from reconnaissance-level observations to determine whether cleanup is required, to detailed oil sample analyses to assist in litigation proceedings or to support long-term scientific research. A hierarchical approach to conducting the monitoring program is recommended, focusing on documenting general distributions of contaminants first and moving towards progressively more detailed data acquisition. Components of the program include aerial reconnaissance surveys, ground surveys, and sample collection surveys.

Le syndrome d'immunodéficience acquise (sida) est une maladie transmissible fatale, de proportions pandémiques, causée par le virus de l'immunodéficience humaine. Le sida se distingue des autres maladies, entre autres parce qu'il fait intervenir des phénomènes sociaux, juridiques et politiques complexes qui ont des répercussions sur les dimensions médicales et scientifiques de la maladie. Dans ce bulletin, nous examinons succinctement certains des aspects juridiques du sida : la discrimination, l'immigration et les visites au Canada, la situation dans les prisons fédérales, le droit pénal et les procès civils.

Le virus que l'on tient responsable du sida, le virus de l'immunodéficience humaine (VIH) a été identifié en 1983. Le mode d'action de ce virus inhabituel est encore mal connu, et il n'existe pas de traitement véritablement efficace contre le sida ou l'infection par le VIH. Five separate permit applications and fee calculations were required for each dwelling, a very time-consuming process for everyone involved. In the interest of streamlining procedures and reducing costs, Calgary's Building Regulations Division, which is responsible for issuing permits, proposed the development of a single permit application process. This document presents the results of a case study on single permit application process.

This is followed by an examination of the consequences of the loss of biodiversity in this country. We will then present the different approaches and actions taken in Canada, both federally and provincially, to ensure the conservation and recovery of species at risk. Also examined is the experience acquired in this regard in certain countries, particularly the United States, which, since 1973, has had a specific statute for the protection of species at risk. Finally, we will look at the most recent federal bills on this topic.

Known amounts of an experimentally weathered heavy oil were layered into water columns over the sediment cores, and during the simulated ebb period were brought into contact with the core surfaces. Measurements were made of gross oil fate, permeation of oil into sediment, and biodegradation of the oil. Also investigated were the influence of sediment grain size, percentage mud content, and time of tidal submerison.

Survey and comparative analysis of ranging techniques for propeller blade ice loads measurements

Recent advances in optical instrumentation suggest the possibility of obtaining data on marine propeller loads in ice-covered waters by measuring blade tip deflections using optical ranging techniques. This report presents results of an investigation of measurement technologies and commercial hardware suitable for making full-scale marine propeller blade measurements. Experimental requirements for a blade deflection measurement system suitable for measurement of ice loads acting on icebreaker propeller blades in service were established. Alternative conceptual approaches to achieve remote optical measurement of blade tip deflections were reviewed and evaluated against those requirements. The availability of suitable optical measurement systems and components was then surveyed. The most promising measurement methodology of a suitable system that could be built using commercially available components is identified and described.

Sustainable tourism planning : a case study of Guimaras, Philippines cooperative farm tourism

By William Trousdale. Vancouver, BC : University of British Columbia, Centre for Human Settlements ; University of British Columbia, School of Community & Regional Planning, 1997. iv, 67 p. : Bibl. (AURN WP / Asian Urban Research Network ; #16 ISSN 1190-8971) At head of title: Asian Urban Research Network. This paper tests the practical application of multiple objective decision analysis (MODA) in promoting sustainable tourism planning by using its conceptual framework to explore planning and decision making on the island of Guimaras in the Philippines. The main focus of the study is to provide insight into how MODA can contribute to sustainable tourism planning and decision making. The paper first establishes a broad context for analyzing tourism planning, including the role of sustainable development in tourism. Leading planning processes are briefly compared using tourism planning criteria and objectives derived from the literature.

MODA is subsequently introduced and its contributions explored in a case study of a farm tourism pilot project on Guimaras. Efforts focus on the effectiveness of the MODA approach for creating and clarifying alternatives in a multiple stakeholder workshop designed to determine the most appropriate farm tourism concept for the island.

Tainting of fishery resources

W. Gordon Tidmarsh...et al. Ottawa : Environmental Studies Revolving Funds, 1986. xx, 174 p. : ill., Bibl. (Environmental Studies Revolving Funds report / Environmental Studies Revolving Funds (Canada) ; no. 021) ISBN 0-920783-20-1 MICROLOG 97-06446 (3 fiche)

This study evaluates real or potential concerns for the tainting of fisheries resources, including shellfish, resulting from oil spills or hydrocarbon development activities. It first defines tainting and identifies the hydrocarbon compounds responsible for tainting. It then reviews known case histories of tainting and procedures currently in place (in Canada and elsewhere) to identify and monitor instances of tainting. The major sensory and chemical analysis methods used to detect the presence of off-flavours and levels of hydrocarbons in tissues, together with a review of research in this field, are presented. Proposed methods and procedures which could be adopted for dealing with a potential tainting situation associated with offshore oil and gas activities are also discussed. Finally, recommendations are made for future studies of tainting.

Tanker navigation safety system, Arctic tanker risk analysis project, phase III

Prepared for: Transportation Development Centre, Safety and Security, Transport Canada ; prepared by: Brad H. Judson. Ottawa : Canarctic Shipping Company Ltd., 1996. vii, 15 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-06809 (1 fiche)

Summarizes the methodology and findings related to the development of a prototype of the Tanker Navigation Safety System (TNSS), a personal computer based software application that utilizes commercially available, geographic information system-based Windows software development platforms. The project consisted of the development and delivery of a working prototype, including source code. TNSS incorporates a deterministic navigation risk model, a routing system interface, illustration of high risk areas for different accident types, and supporting data on casualty rates, causes, consequences, and marine operator errors. An example risk analysis output is included.

Le sixième colloque annuel de la Banque du Canada, qui s'est déroulé les 26 et 27 octobre 1996, avait pour thème "Les taux de change et la politique monétaire". La première séance du colloque portait sur l'influence que les divers régimes de change et mécanismes institutionnels peuvent exercer sur la crédibilité de la politique monétaire et les résultats macro-économiques. La deuxième, consacrée aux chocs d'origine étrangère et aux régimes de change, traitait de l'applicabilité des régimes de changes fixes et de changes flottants aux différentes régions économiques, ainsi que de l'effet que ces régimes ont sur la dynamique du cycle économique. La troisième avait pour objet d'étudier l'interaction des chartistes et des fondamentalistes sur le marché des changes et l'efficacité de diverses techniques servant à modéliser les stratégies de couverture du risque de change.

Lors de la quatrième et dernière séance, qui avait pour thème l'efficacité et la crédibilité des interventions sur le marché des changes, l'efficacité des interventions des banques centrales a été évaluée à l'aide de données quotidiennes provenant du Canada, des États-Unis et d'autres grands pays industriels.

Dans ce document, on traite de divers aspects de la taxe sur les opérations financières. Dans la première partie, on aborde les questions plus théoriques : en quoi consiste la taxe, dans quel but est-elle proposée et pourquoi certains s'y opposent. Dans la deuxième, on évoque certains des problèmes conceptuels qu'il faudrait régler si le gouvernement envisageait d'imposer une telle taxe. Enfin, dans la dernière, on examine les recettes susceptibles d'être tirées, en théorie et en pratique, d'une TOF et tente d'en estimer le montant réalisable au Canada.

The control and management of toxic substances in Canada has not been assumed by any one level of government and requires the input of both the federal and provincial governments. It is essential, therefore, that efforts are coordinated and made as uniform as possible. The success of interjurisdictional efforts to control toxic substances ultimately depends upon the adequacy of standards throughout the country, the effectiveness of mechanisms to enforce those standards and the ability of the federal and provincial governments to coordinate their efforts in this regard. This document precisely looks at the federal-provincial control of toxic substances.

The scope of this bibliography covers the training of northern Canadians for wage employment and on employment opportunities and impacts in the North. The 861 citations focus on the Northwest Territories and Yukon, with strong representation from the Mackenzie Valley and Delta regions reflecting the interest of oil and gas companies. Citations (all annotated) describe material from 1970 to 1986 and also include some 40 citations from the 1960s. Literature types included are monographs, journal articles, conference proceedings, theses, pamphlets, and reports. The bibliography is organized by broad topic, with sections covering training for employment, employment opportunities and impacts in specific sectors, labour mobility and commuting, consequences of wage employment, emerging strategies for employment, and background topics on employment and development. Includes subject, geographic, author, title, and serial indexes.

On November 18, 1929, a magnitude 7.2 earthquake occurred on the continental shelf off Newfoundland and caused a tsunami that struck the Burin Peninsula. Three successive waves carried water as high as 27 metres at the heads of several of the peninsula's long narrow bays. The community of St. Lawrence, at the head of one such bay, was inundated and suffered substantial property damage. This report reviews the history of the St. Lawrence tsunami event through newspaper accounts published at the time and by oral history interviews with senior community members. The recollections are used to map the tsunami runup zone, or the area of the tsunami's maximum extent inland. The areas and facilities of present-day St. Lawrence which could be affected by a similar tsunami are noted and recommendations are made regarding emergency planning in the St. Lawrence area.

Presents a study assessing the current state of knowledge of the underwater geometry of icebergs and investigating alternative methods for mapping the underwater portion of icebergs. The report identifies and reviews all previous recorded measurements of the underwater portion of icebergs, and evaluates the feasibility of constructing three dimensional shapes from these data. Factors affecting the performance of an acoustic iceberg mapping system are discussed, including frequency versus range and resolution, angle of incidence, and beam bending. Alternative sensors considered include underwater low-light television, lidar, and impulse radar. The report also examines a variety of sensing devices for their potential use in underwater mapping of icebergs, and addresses the sensor platform stability and positioning problem, methods of sensor deployment, and signal processing requirements. Original conceptual designs are presented for two iceberg imaging systems, both using the combined effect of the directionalities of the transmitter and receiver to generate a series of searchlight-type beams on a narrow area of the iceberg representing its vertical profile.

Piglets after weaning suffer from intestinal imbalance, and it is suggested that administration of fructo-oligosaccharides (FOS) in pigs may overcome post-weaning growth check and scours by providing a gut environment which promotes beneficial bacteria, better absorption of nutrients, and enhancement of disease resistance. This report describes research to study the effects of FOS incorporated into the diet of animals, particularly weaned pigs, on growth performance, feed efficiency, nutritional status, and intestinal bacterial populations. Research included examination of the effect of FOS on weaned mice and a study of the use of dietary FOS to improve resistance to pathogens and growth performance in chickens, as well as the experiments on pigs.

A recent paper has suggested that there might be a trade-off between inflation and unemployment at low inflation rates, leading some economists to recommend that Canada increase its inflation rate. Underlying this view is the idea that, because firms are reluctant to cut workers' nominal wages, a moderate amount of inflation can be used to facilitate needed reductions in real wages. This paper first details the key steps in the 1996 analysis by Akerlof, Dickens, and Perry that models a negative long-run relationship between inflation and unemployment. Some of the theoretical and empirical issues surrounding each step in the analysis are discussed, and the five main steps linking downward nominal-wage rigidity to a policy conclusion in favour of higher inflation are considered. The final section discusses some of the monetary policy conclusions for Canada resulting from the analysis.

Five underwater ambient noise sensors known as WOTAN (Wind Observation Through Ambient Noise) were deployed as part of the wind measurement program in the Canadian Atlantic Storms Program. The purpose of the deployment was to test the sensors' potential for providing wind speed measurements at mesoscale spacing. These measurements are based on a well-established empirical relationship between surface wind speed and the intensity of the ambient noise field. This report describes the WOTAN instrument calibration, the collection and processing of the acoustic data, and the estimation of wind speed from those data. Time series of wind speeds calculated from the WOTAN measurements are presented, using two different algorithms, for four of the five stations deployed.
